Instructions for Authors

The North Carolina Medical Journal is a medium for communication with and by members of the medical community of this state. The Journal will consider for publication articles relating to and illuminating medical science, practice, and history; editorials and opinion pieces; letters; personal accounts; poetry and whimsical musings; and photographs and drawings. Papers that relate to the present, past, or future practice of the health professions in North Carolina are especially pertinent, but manuscripts reflecting other perspectives or topics are welcomed. Prospective authors should feel free to discuss potential articles with the editors.

Manuscript Preparation

Authors should submit papers prepared according to the "Uniform Requirements for Manuscripts Submitted to Biomedical Journals" (N Engl J Med 1991;324:424-8) with the following exceptions: 1) no abstract is needed for an article; 2) no running title is needed; and 3) measurements must be reported in metric units, but use of the International System of Units (SI) is optional.

To summarize major elements: Submit two copies of text (including Letters to the Editor), double-spaced typed with one-inch margins, on one side of each sheet of paper. Title page should include addresses, and telephone and facsimile numbers of the corresponding author. Authors may submit a cover letter and a 3 1/2- or 5 1/4-inch floppy computer disc containing the text written in MS DOS compatible format (WordPerfect, Microsoft Word, Displaywrite, or ASCII).

Submit illustrations, in duplicate, in the form of high-quality color 35mm slides or 5-by-7-inch or 8-by-10-inch glossy photographs, or as black-and-white glossy prints (5-by-7-inch or 8-by-10-inch). Label all illustrations with author's name, number them sequentially according to their position in the text, and indicate the orientation of the images, if necessary. Do not write directly on the backs of prints. This can damage them.

Type figure legends, double-spaced, on a separate sheet of paper. Tables should be typed, double-spaced, one to a single sheet of paper. All tables must have titles and consecutive Arabic numbers.

Keep references to a minimum (no more than 15, preferably 10 or fewer), retaining those that document important points. The "Uniform Requirements" cited above contain the format for references. Authors are responsible for the accuracy and pertinence of all citations.

Avoid abbreviations entirely if possible; keep them to a minimum if not. When used, completely define abbreviations at the first point of usage in the text.

Manuscript Review and Editing

A medically qualified editor reads all manuscripts and, in most instances, sends them out for further review by one or more other members of the North Carolina Medical Society. Authors' cover letters should include a line that states that their submitted manuscripts are not under consideration for publication elsewhere. Decisions to publish or not are made by the editors, advised by the peer reviewers.

We encourage a relatively informal writing style because we believe this improves communication. Imagine yourself talking with your unseen audience—as long as this doesn't lead you to scientific or linguistic inaccuracy. Be brief, clear, simple, and precise.

We edit accepted manuscripts for clarity, style, and conciseness. Except for letters, authors receive a copy of the edited manuscript for their review and approval before publication. Manuscripts not accepted will not be returned.

Authors retain copyright to articles published in the North Carolina Medical Journal, but the North Carolina Medical Society copyrights the contents of each entire issue. Requests for permission to reprint all or any part of a published article must be submitted in writing to the address below and negotiated with the author and editor jointly. Reprinted material must carry a credit line identifying that it appeared in the North Carolina Medical Journal.

Letters to the Editor

A Question of Validity

To the Editor:

The article "The Reinvention of Traditional Medicine in Western North Carolina" (NC Med J 1993;54:550-2) emphasizes Cherokee healing practices and how they may be of value in healing non-Cherokees. Having cultivated a close personal friendship over many years with the most senior medicine person (one of three) of the eastern band of the Cherokee tribe, I have some familiarity with Cherokee healing beliefs and practices.

I am disturbed by statements about Cherokee spiritual and healing practices and beliefs that are simply not true. The beliefs described in this article as "Cherokee" would more closely be identified as "new age," which often tries to link itself to native American beliefs. Some of the sources quoted by these authors including "D. Ywahoo" and the person described in the article as "a Cherokee shaman named Beautiful Painted Arrow, one of the last remaining shamans of southeastern America," are not only not Cherokee medicine people, but they are not even Cherokee Indians. I cannot comment on the value of these people's teachings, but they are not what they represent themselves to be. The validity of these practices are not to be found in their antiquity, since these are not the beliefs of the ancients.

I expect a higher degree of care and research than exhibited in this article, especially by authors from academic departments at our state universities here in North Carolina.

Steven J. Stafford, M.D.
Central Carolina Urology Associates
3320 Wake Forest Road, Suite 100
Raleigh, NC 27609

The Authors Respond:

We appreciate Dr. Stafford's interest in our article and his concern about accurate representation of Cherokee culture. We would like, however, to clarify the point that our article is not about Cherokee medicine but rather about the reinterpretation of Cherokee healing practices by urban, non-Cherokee people. We were asked to write an article about folk medicine that would be helpful for physicians who treat patients who use alternative medical therapies. We do think it is useful for physicians to know something about how patients who use folk medicine interpret their illness experiences and respond to physician recommendations. In addressing our subject, we felt that it would be particularly useful to examine some examples of what is popularly referred to as "New Age healing," that is, the reinvention by participants of "traditional" practices and their incorporation into new systems of healing. These practices are an increasingly important phenomenon in American society today and it is precisely from their invocation of "tradition" that they draw their popularity.

The point of our article was to demonstrate how "Cherokee traditions" have been reinterpreted in new healing systems in western North Carolina, of how participants in these new healing systems have recreated the notion of what Cherokee culture is. Participants in the Earth Center, the healing group described in the article, perceive Beautiful Painted Arrow as a Cherokee shaman, and describe him as "one of the last remaining shamans of southeastern America" in order to confirm his authority and hence the authority of the healing rituals that they have created. Dr. Stafford comments that "the validity of these practices is not to be found in their antiquity since these are not the beliefs of the ancients." We do not argue that these rituals are authentic ancient Cherokee rituals. The point of our article is that the people who participate in these rituals believe them to be ancient traditions and that in their perceived antiquity rests the power of these rituals.

As anthropologists, we believe it is critical to respect the integrity of all Native American cultures. As anthropologists, we also believe it is critical to examine our own culture as an object of study. Clearly, "reinvented" traditional healing practices are becoming more common in our culture. These practices are valid objects of study and, given their increasing popular appeal, cannot be ignored by either medical anthropologists or medical practitioners.

Inmates' Right to Health Care

To the Editor:

Dr. Rosemarie Tong's discussion of the philosophical considerations of the "right" to health care (NC Med J 1993; 54:590-5) was particularly intriguing to me since all of my patients already have a legally established "right" to health care. I am medical director of a jail health service. Dr. Tong enumerated all of the potential justifications for such a right, i.e. moral, political, economic, and personal, but omitted the one under which we function. That justification is judicial.

The Supreme Court decided nearly two decades ago that inmates in jails and prisons, whether serving sentences or awaiting adjudication, had the right to adequate health care. It further declared indifference to that right to be grounds for lawsuit. A series of federal class action suits have since expanded and defined that right. The jail population has quadrupled during this same interval. It is a population that by its very definition is familiar with the legal system and cognizant of its rights. Lawsuits brought by inmates mean that most of the nation's correctional facilities currently operate under consent orders. The name of this game is to balance the risk of litigation with available resources.

It would be an interesting experiment to see if a managed health care system could serve the incarcerated population—those with a clearly defined right to adequate health care. If Dr. Tong wants to see a demonstration project of such a population I invite her to come and see me.

H. Strawcutter, M.D., Medical Director
Robeson County Detention Center
2316 Sanchez Drive
Lumberton, NC 28358

Dr. Tong Replies:

Dr. Strawcutter offers us the opportunity to see if a managed health care system can be developed to deliver health care goods and services to one segment of the population that does indeed have a right to health care: the prison population. In view of the fact that health care resources are no more available in prisons than they are in the larger society, his hope is to avoid litigation by prisoners insistent on having their rights honored. Although I fully appreciate why the Supreme Court deemed that prisoners have a right to health care—they are, after all, a group of people toward whom the larger society feels little, if any, sense of obligation—I nevertheless wish that it had not done so. Not only is it difficult for prison authorities to dispense what they do not have, it is simply too difficult for the average U.S. citizen to understand why in Seattle, Washington, for example, murderers receive liver transplants, while the hard-working, but relatively poor relatives of their victims most probably go unaided.

Cover Kudos

To the Editor:

I want to express my gratitude to the Journal editorial staff for using my drawing, "Southern Railroad Depot," on the cover of the November 1993 issue of the North Carolina Medical Journal. I sincerely appreciate the beautiful way in which the drawing was displayed and the inclusion of the short historical perspective (NC Med J 1993;54:566).

I have always enjoyed reading the North Carolina Medical Journal. It is extremely well done and provides me with a very important perspective of medicine in North Carolina. Many thanks to you and your staff for an outstanding job with the publication.

The Need for Tort Reform

To the Editor:

I enjoyed Dr. Councill's letter in the November issue of the North Carolina Medical Journal (NC Med J 1993;54:564-5). I agree with the several other physicians who commented that this letter summarizes key negative aspects of the current malpractice situation and demonstrates the urgent need for significant tort reform.

To the points made by Dr. Councill, I would add two others:

1) Physicians suffer a significant emotional toll because of greed-rooted frivolous lawsuits, supported by unscrupulous attorneys. Physicians must deal with enough patient care-related stress and strain without having the burden of non-meritorious suits. What a terrible waste of resources! 2) There is a Kafkaesque contradiction in promoting managed care while maintaining the current malpractice situation without tort reform. What a cruel and insulting joke on people who have dedicated a significant portion of their lives to acquiring skills and knowledge to help other people! I agree thoroughly with Dr. Councill that tort reform is urgently necessary.

Obviously, lobbyists for lawyers are not going to support tort reform. A recent Wall Street Journal article stated that tort reform is not on the immediate horizon because it contradicts the interests of lawyers' lobbyists. Nevertheless, logical and rational people should support the very urgent need for tort reform, knowing the fact that it may be "a long time coming."

Cases in Court: A Malpractice Lawyer's Viewpoint

To the Editor:

The "sitting duck" returns. Maybe the responses to my article (NC Med J 1993;54:352-4) are so vituperative because the respondents feel that lawyers never admit the possibility of frivolous lawsuits, just like doctors never admit the possibility of medical negligence. Let me give, as examples of meritorious cases, two that we settled during 1993:

Case 1: A 24-year-old patient, recovering from a head injury, fell 17 feet from an unsecured window to a concrete pad, receiving a second serious head injury. During the day he had alarmed nursing personnel by packing his suitcase, striking out at a nurse during blood draw, and running up three flights of stairs. He was diagnosed by his physician as confused and agitated. A doctor's order for "behavior precautions, Haldol, and restraints as necessary" was neither seen nor complied with by nursing personnel. This fact was uncontested.

The neuropsychiatrist who was treating him testified that the standard of care in agitated coma recovery cases when there is demonstrated intent to wander (as in this case) requires a safe environment, medication, and sometimes one-on-one supervision. In fact, this patient was left alone in a day room for one hour.

Other testimony came from a non-treating expert psychiatrist who does inspections for the Commission for the Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities and from a head injury specialist from the NIH. Each expert had served as medical director of a reputable head injury center. It was not hard to come by experts, even local ones, experienced at all levels of head injury health care. Obviously, this was a complex case. There were issues of premises liability and a problem with disentangling the effects of the second head injury upon the first. Anyone in the field would recognize the integrity and expertise of the doctors who testified for the plaintiff.

The NIH expert looked at the patient's rate of recovery after both injuries, his present inability to live independently five years after the second, and determined that the damages resulting from the fall were severe and lifelong. This case ended with a structured settlement that provides monthly payments for life. The money is held in a trust, administered by a bank and the patient's court-appointed guardian, to pay for the patient's medical care, which costs approximately $70,000 per year.

Case 2: A baby was born with cerebral palsy, severe mental retardation, cortical blindness, and seizures. During delivery, profound and marked cardiac slowing resulting in hypoxia was fully documented on the fetal heart monitor strip. The doctor who delivered the baby testified that a nurse failed to recognize the danger of decreased heart rate, failed to notify the doctor (in fact, told the doctor that the strip was fine), failed to administer oxygen per protocol, failed to start an IV, failed to turn the mother on her side and otherwise deviated from the standard of care. In fact, the mother was left alone to labor for three hours. At one point, the fetal monitor strip paper ran out and the husband had to find a nurse to insert another roll.

The neonatal course met NIH criteria for hypoxic ischemic encephalopathy. The baby weighed more than nine pounds at birth, there was no intrauterine growth retardation, no evidence of viral infection, no genetic problem, and no evidence of a prior hypoxic incident. We investigated this case for a full two years before filing suit, knowing that only 6% of cerebral palsy is caused by birth injury. One of our experts was a Duke University medical school graduate, former resident, and perinatal fellow. Another of our experts teaches maternal-fetal medicine; the third is in full-time clinical practice in Atlanta. There is no doubt about the integrity and expertise of the doctors who testified for the plaintiff.

This case settled for a significant sum, although less than the expected expenses, because the estimated cost of care for this baby, even with his shortened life expectancy, exceeds any amount ever awarded by a North Carolina jury. The parents are fast approaching the $1 million lifetime cap on their insurance coverage. They will need every cent to care for their child.

In the face of a vigorous and well-financed insurance defense, we might have lost either of these cases despite their merit. One of your respondents suggests that plaintiffs who lose should pay the insurance company's attorney's fees. Imagine the injustice to the wife of a head-injured breadwinner or the parents of a handicapped child were this the law.

Repeatedly, your respondents ignore the issue that it is their patient who is dissatisfied and other physicians who tell the lawyer and the jury what the standard of care requires.

The Value of PSA Screening To the Editor:

Drs. Wong and Feussner admirably analyzed the dilemmas we face with prostate cancer (NC Med J 1993;54:568-71). From their perspective, one positive biopsy and three negative ones rate an exclamation point. From the patient's perspective, a negative biopsy is a true delight.

Their article states: "But the value of the PSA as a screening test falls short of our basic criteria," but they do not tell us what their criteria are.

The difficulties with radical prostatectomy focus on the lifestyle problems of impotence and urinary incontinence.

It is crucial to the analysis of whether or not to use PSA to consider its sequential use in the same patient. A single PSA for "Susan's father, Sydney Smith, age 63" is one value. If Mr. Smith had had a PSA each year from age 50 we might interpret the value at age 63 quite differently.

John R. Dykers, Jr., M.D.
P.O. Box 565
Siler City, NC 27344

Drs. Wong and Feussner Reply:

We are pleased that Dr. Dykers found our article thought-provoking and offer these comments in reply.

Each of the questions we posed to the reader (NC Med J 1993;54:218-21) and subsequently discuss in our analyses are the important criteria by which we judge the usefulness (or uselessness) of any screening strategy. We applied this method to the PSA determination and concluded that it fell short of the criteria when used as a screening test.

We do agree that the "true delight" of a "negative biopsy" may be very helpful in the therapeutic management of some patients. However, getting a benign pathological result for a patient that did not require a biopsy in the first place is not often helpful. Furthermore, falsely "negative biopsies" can and do occur. What

"true delight" would a patient have with a "negative biopsy" report only to develop symptomatic prostate cancer later on?

Dr. Dykers has identified some important problems associated with radical prostatectomy. Another crucial problem includes the potential of fatal outcomes from this procedure.¹ This underscores the need for proof that this procedure actually improves and prolongs life for our male patients, a point that is still contended.²

Finally, the data regarding usefulness of serial PSA determinations for prostate cancer screening are incomplete and suffer from the same limited predictive value that the single PSA test does. Our analysis of the available data would not suggest that 13 PSA determinations for Mr. Smith (one each since age 50), or 13,000 PSA tests for 1,000 Mr. Smiths, would be a wise use of our health care resources.

Pearl of the Month: "New Year's Resolution"

Let's resolve to give shots that are relatively painless. Most of the nerve endings are in the skin—a few are deep in the muscle.

1. Lay the patient on the exam table—both buttocks exposed.
2. Slap both cheeks sort of hard. Swab both cheeks quickly.
3. Before feeling nerve endings reorganize pop the needle in deep where you want it. (Going slow hurts the skin nerve endings badly.)
4. With your thumb on the plunger, make the plunger stay still and with two fingers retract the syringe barrel over the plunger. This puts the drug in a long narrow track instead of a 1 cc pool, which has to tear muscle fibers to make a 1 cc space.
5. When finished, snatch the syringe out and hide it quickly.
6. Ask the patient, "Are you ready?" You will be surprised how many will say, "Yeah, go ahead."
7. If you took over six seconds total to administer the shot, you need practice, and the pain was worse.

Valedictory Address

By 1993 NCMS President F. Maxton Mauney, Jr., M.D.

Editor's note: The following essay is based on a speech given by Dr. Mauney, an Asheville cardiothoracic surgeon and 1993 president of the North Carolina Medical Society, which he delivered to the Society's House of Delegates at the Annual Meeting held in Charlotte in November 1993.

By tradition, I owe an accounting of my year of stewardship.

I am proud to report that my fellow officers have been keenly aware of their responsibilities, serious about their oaths of office and totally dedicated in responding to the business of this organization. No one has said, "Heck, let the next administration tackle that one." This has been a year of tumultuous upheaval and focused debate about the future of medical care and, in parallel, the future of the North Carolina Medical Society. I hope that the investment of considerable time, much energy, and a lot of emotion will, over time, better prepare this Society for the important tasks ahead.

One of the reasons I sought the office of president was to help organized medicine continue as a strong voice for my two sons who have chosen medicine as a career and for all the other young physicians. If "positioning" is the current buzzword, then the Society is, in my view, "repositioned" and "well positioned" for continued improvement in its effectiveness.

Last year, I highlighted concerns that I believed important. Foremost was my firm conviction that our Society needed to become stronger, tougher, and more responsive than ever before. I emphasized the need to improve communication with members, the public, and allied organizations. I indicated my special interest in doing all that could be done to strengthen, and if necessary, reorganize our Department of Governmental Affairs and our legislative/lobbying effort. Finally, I pledged that the staff and officers would spare no effort to build stronger bridges and closer working relationships with large and small component societies statewide and with allied organizations.

We began with a self-assessment study of our headquarters operation and an analysis of the relationship of our staff with committee chairs, councilors, commissioners, and officers. We have continued throughout the year to critically examine operational decisions and the governing process. I must share a conversation I had some time ago with an Episcopal priest friend of mine who explained that there really was no difference between the various denominations of churches that had "deacons," "elders," or "vestry members." He went on to say that all these groups had the same primary mission—to protect the eight sacred words of their respective organizations. These eight words, in case you are interested, are: "But we've never done it that way before." Believe me, I heard these words more than once during the past year. I emphasized that no operational policy was too sacred to be asked the basic question: "Can we do it better?"

I have strived for more openness, for more sharing of responsibility, and for more effective partnerships, internally and externally. I believe that we have built a new sense of trust and respect between individual members of the staff, between the staff and officers, and between the members and officers. Most importantly, we have reached out to our allied organizations in a genuine effort to rebuild old and valuable linkages, because the ultimate task of president is to build a consensus among all of the diverse specialty groups that are woven into the fabric of this organization. I am proud that the House of Medicine in North Carolina has not broken down into a bunch of self-interest splinter groups but remains focused on quality care for our patients and preservation of our great heritage as practitioners of medicine.

Staffing Changes

At this time, I stand before you as president of a Medical Society whose executive vice president's resignation became effective October 12, 1993; a society whose director of Governmental Affairs asked for and received reassignment to health policy director; a Society whose entire legislative and lobbying program is in the process of critical review, evaluation, and probably, reorganization. I offer no apology for this state of affairs—on the contrary, I believe the Society has an unparalleed opportunity to become more flexible and more responsive to membership needs than we have in a long time.

On a personal note, let me digress a moment to publicly express our appreciation to George E. Moore, former executive VP, for the many contributions he made to the operation of this organization over the course of a decade. His dedication to his work was evident 24 hours a day, seven days of every week. He wanted to be involved personally in almost every facet of day-to-day operations, and to a considerable extent he was. George will be missed by me and the many other friends he came to know in this organization. I join you in wishing him the very best his future endeavors.

A committee has been appointed to search for a new executive vice president. The committee was appointed with consideration to geographic, age, gender, and leadership representation. The members are Joe Jenkins, urologist of Fayetteville, John Daniels, general surgeon of Durham, C.K. Rust, internist of Wilmington, Jeff Runge, emergency room physician of Charlotte, Liz Kanof, dermatologist of Raleigh, Bill Costenbader, ENT surgeon and hospital medical director from Asheville, John Fagg, speaker of the Medical Society, and chaired by Carolyn Ferree, secretary-treasurer. The committee will have the necessary fiscal resources and will take the necessary time to select from a very strong group of applicants the very best qualified person for this Society. I am confident that the Society will be well served and well directed by an individual with the experience and team-building skills the position demands.

"We spent an inordinate amount of time and energy on alternative medicine issues last year, and I am afraid that it is not a dead issue."

Year in Review

With no significance in order or presentation, here is an overview of important activities accomplished this year.

Tim Pittman, our new director of Communications, arranged a series of statewide visits by officers and regional medical leaders to major newspaper editors, editorial staff, publishers, and recognized medical reporters. This proactive engagement has and will continue to help us get our message out. His new publication, "Component Chronicles," helps us share AMA, North Carolina Medical Society, and regional news across the state. He arranged the largest press conference ever in our headquarters building the day after President Clinton presented his health care reform plan to Congress. Health care reform briefing books explaining our position have been prepared for officers, members of our Legislature, and members of Congress. The Communications Department staff will get more closely involved and coordinated with our lobbying program before and during sessions of the Legislature.

Our Third Party Relations Committee, led by Phil Sellers with the strong staff support of Peggy Boughers, has done a yeoman's job this year. The HCFA-mandated Carrier Advisor Committee (CAC) is now implemented in all 50 states, and coordinated nationally by the AMA. It has met every quarter, is maturing rapidly, and the almost 70 specialty representatives on the CAC have begun to understand how to work with our carrier and the system.

Ann Hale has compiled an excellent report and summary of the vital work of our Legislative Committee. It was an inordinately long legislative session that considered hundreds of bills of interest to organized medicine. Dr. Joe Jenkins has agreed to continue as chair of the Legislation Committee. With his concurrence, I appointed a group of seven to serve as the North Carolina Medical Society Legislative Executive Cabinet. This group met frequently and worked closely with Dr. Jenkins, Ann Hale, Elizabeth Bailey, and our two lobbyists. This smaller group was able to better define strategy and deploy our limited resources in the most effective way. We spent an inordinate amount of time and energy on alternative medicine issues last year, and I am afraid that it is not a dead issue. Karen Gottovi, wife of Dr. Dan Gottovi, is one of five House members appointed to the North Carolina Health Planning Commission, and we are glad to have someone with her intellect and insight on this Commission. On August 5, 1993, I appointed an ad hoc committee on Governmental Affairs Operation to carefully review our principal lobbying needs. The committee looked in detail at our Governmental Affairs budget, current organization and staff responsibilities, our lobbying effectiveness, and our past and possible future relationship with the law firm of Smith, Anderson. Recommendations of the group have been presented to the Executive Committee and negotiations are under way to see that we deploy the most effective program we can assemble next year. It is a must for the Society.

Dr. Gene Mayer has agreed to chair a task force on the governance of the North Carolina Medical Society. Gene has considerable insight and experience with this subject since he chaired our initial governance study group in 1987. The Executive Committee has strongly recommended, and I agree, that we should have another look at our governance and change it if we can find a better way. The "concept" of 18 districts, nine "rural" and nine "urban," is not working as well as we hoped it would. In fact we may have put in place an idea ahead of its time.

We have reassessed the marketing strategy for our newly introduced health benefits insurance program offered by Blue Cross/Blue Shield through the Medical Mutual Insurance Company. Your Executive Committee mandated that we had to make this program available to all our members. That means marketing the plan in Buncombe, Mecklenburg, and Pitt counties where existing proprietary health insurance products are already offered by those component societies. We have communicated with these organizations and will try to introduce our product without direct solicitation of subscribers in pre-existing programs. The Member Benefits and Services Committee is developing a means of sharing revenue with component societies who co-endorse and help promote our many endorsed programs. I hope this can be worked out, as it will be a carrot/carrot opportunity that will help all of us with non-dues revenue support. It is yet another example of how state and component organizations can thrive in a synergistic relationship.

I applaud this House for approving making affiliate membership available to physician assistants. As someone closely involved with the PA movement from its inception at Duke in 1966, I am proud to announce that we now have more than 125 dues-paying PA members in this organization.

I have had to expend less time and energy with the North Carolina Medical Society Alliance than with any other of our closely allied organizations. This was not by design, but dictated by circumstance and the fact that we clearly have always had a strong bond and a very effective linkage with their leadership that just gets better every year. The work of the Alliance also gets better as indicated in the annual report delivered by Alliance President Gay Bowman.

Earlier this year, we had a very useful meeting with the North Carolina Hospital Association president and selected board members. Dr. Kanof is trying to schedule a follow-up meeting. We disagree with the Hospital Association on some issues, but the two organizations have much to gain by working jointly on common concerns that are threatening the health care delivery system. I am extremely pleased that Ed McCauley, president of the North Carolina Hospital Association, was able to attend our meeting this year, and I extend to him a warm welcome. I hope his presence is symbolic of future potential collaboration between our respective organizations.

Essential Benefits Model

Two years of hard work by Dr. Donald Lucey and the more than 60 hard-working specialist members of his Essential Benefits Task Force have given us their report. Supported by a grant from the Kate B. Reynolds Health Care Trust, this monumental work may become a national model and is gaining a lot of favorable review and acknowledgment across the country, even before its full completion and review by this House. The psychiatric portion needs more refinement, but the fact that "essential," "desirable," and "optional" psychiatric diagnostic and treatment pairs are to be incorporated in this document is noteworthy. It parallels the fact that the AMA formally incorporated a psychiatric coverage benefits package last June.

I am very proud to have supported and encouraged the progress of this task force and am delighted to have its report reach the House at this time. It is a dynamic and ongoing piece of work. Margaret Woodcock has been untiring in her staff responsibility for this project. She very much deserves our appreciation for seeing this through some hard times, as does Don Lucey whose dedication and consensus-building have created this excellent report. Some may argue that the methodology is "not pure," some may object to the various rankings, but no one can question the importance of starting to allocate our finite health care resources. The question of whether health care or health care access is a basic right becomes somewhat moot when you finally admit that there are simply not enough resources out there to give everything to every living person on demand.

Board of Medical Examiners

I met twice with the Board of Medical Examiners, the last time in executive session with the entire Board in September 1993. The Board and our Society each benefit from better understanding of our mutual concerns. The Board and its executive secretary agreed with my proposal to establish a Data Collection Task Force, to better address the manpower data needs of the North Carolina Medical Society, AHEC, the Sheps Center in Chapel Hill, the North Carolina Academy of Family Practice, and others including possibly the General Assembly Commission on Health Care Reform.

Accurate, timely, and mandatory medical manpower data collection is becoming more crucial. This collaborative endeavor is a giant step forward from the recent past.

Our Board of Medical Examiners is facing a fiscal crisis by December 1994 unless we help them with all available resources to get the bi-annual registration fee raised. The vital role of the BME in credentialing physicians, investigating complaints, and in salvaging careers rather than destroying them deserves our unwavering support. The BME is working hard to become more user friendly. Leaders of both the Board and the Society have agreed to meet informally but regularly at intervals throughout the coming year.

Tobacco Legislation

Critics took us to task on the issue of lobbying tobacco legislation, accusing the North Carolina leadership of rolling over, of abandoning the high moral ground, of not fully supporting our Tobacco Task Force and our Cancer Committee's hard work. Our Legislative Cabinet would see it differently. Like good tacticians, we reserved our troops to fight again at a time and place where we could achieve a victory. That opportunity came when Dr. Ron Levine, State health director, and I coordinated a letter-writing campaign to all component society leaders and to county health department directors urging passage of local smoking control rules before the October 15 expiration date of the state statutes relating to this issue. As of November 1993, 31 counties have community-wide smoking regulations and 25 additional counties have restricted smoking in county and city buildings. This effort was such a huge success that the Tobacco Institute of Washington is considering a lawsuit in several eastern counties.

Conclusion

I come to my final comment. In general, organizations are greater than the sum of their parts. I learned this the hard way when precipitously confronted with a critical and life-threatening illness 10 years ago. My hospitalized post-op heart patients were cared for with great skill and concern by my partners and nursing staff, bills were paid, my children took over additional responsibilities. I would like to believe I came out of the experience as a "kinder, gentler" man. I was humbled by the realization that I was not so indispensable and enlightened by the realization that all truly good work continues.

Two months ago we were suddenly without an executive vice president and yet, the good work of the Society goes on as it has for 144 years. It does so because of the excellent work of you, the members, who serve with extraordinary dedication as committee members, chairs, councilors, commissioners, and officers. I am deeply grateful to so many who have helped and given me their support. It continues because the headquarters staff, with a new sense of empowerment and responsibility, has stepped in and done their work better than ever.

In my last "President's Newsletter," I said this has been a year of myriad feelings and emotions. There have been major low points and some terrific highs. There have been a few successes, some disappointments, occasional aggravations, and some frustrations. I have a scrapbook with several hundred letters—some critical and a few appreciative ones—a lot of frequent flyer miles, and enough good memories and new friendships to last a lifetime. Overall it has been a challenging and satisfying year, and, although hectic, it's been fun.

The days ahead will be challenging. This society will be ready and capable to meet those challenges. Many of you are tired of the hassle, upset about inadequate reimbursement, and worried as to how you will survive in the as yet undefined "managed competition" environment. There will be change. More than ever we must expand the membership of the North Carolina Medical Society, the AMA, the political action committees. More than ever we must hang tough, hang together, and hang on to this great profession. □

Inaugural Address

By 1994 NCMS President Elizabeth P. Kanof, M.D.

Editor's note: The following essay is based on a speech given by Dr. Kanof, a Raleigh dermatologist and 1994 president of the North Carolina Medical Society, which she delivered to the Society's House of Delegates at the Annual Meeting held in Charlotte in November 1993.

On October 23, 1993, I saw on CBS News a colleague of ours in family practice being interviewed about the hassles of medical practice and their impact upon his effectiveness as a physician. Before the interview was over, this physician, several years my senior and looking very tired, was in tears and rubbing his forehead in desperation. That disturbing image will shadow me during this year in which you have entrusted to me the leadership of our Society. I pledge to make every effort to strengthen and inspire the family of medicine in this state by encouraging our sticking together, serving together, and sharing together.

Sticking Together

We need to crystallize the central core beliefs of North Carolina physicians about health system reform so that we can speak with a unified, effective voice in the ongoing debate. To do this we must better understand the issues. Last year our Society sponsored seminars on health system reform and how to adapt to the legal, regulatory, and structural changes facing us. These seminars will continue under the leadership of Dr. Larry Cutchin, our first vice president and Lisa Jernigan, our executive assistant for Business Services. We have already scheduled seminars on: Managed Care, Clinics Without Walls, Health Alliances, Medicare Update 1994, Coding Seminars, Improving Office Productivity and Performance, How to Conduct an Internal Audit, Medical-Legal Updates, and Relating to the Media.

We have just initiated a new project, the formation of a network to assist certified medical assistants in finding employment. Updated listings will be distributed to component societies monthly and to members requesting them in the hope of expediting the filling of staff vacancies.

Gene Mayer, our Communications Committee chair, Tim Pittman, our Communications director, and the Communications Committee will continue to strengthen internal and external communications. The "Component Chronicle," a compilation of timely and important health information, is provided weekly to component society presidents and executives and has already enabled us to communicate more rapidly. Our first forum for the public on health system reform was held in Raleigh on October 25, 1993, and was a great success. Six more are scheduled across the state; the staff would be happy to assist in sponsoring one in your community.

As president, Mac Mauney initiated an Executive Committee of county executives that allows them to work more closely with the Medical Society leadership; that approach will continue this year. Feelings of being overwhelmed vanish when I meet with them and our staff at headquarters. Their dedication and hard work makes it possible to fulfill our objectives.

It doesn't happen often that the president of the North Carolina Medical Society is also a member of the NCMS Alliance, our closest ally. My hope is that the Society and the Alliance will work more closely than ever before on issues such as adolescent health, family violence, and the health of you, the doctor, and the medical family.

With Thad Wester as our president-elect, I look for a renewed sense of warmth and cooperation between the public and private sectors for the betterment of all that we do to promote good health in North Carolina. As an example, our combined efforts in sending a sample smoking control statute to local boards of health, county commissioners, and county society presidents was met by a gratifying response: 32 counties responded by passing city-wide smoking restriction ordinances and 24 by limiting smoking in public buildings. We are a more effective force when we work with all of our allies than when we work alone.

We also plan to work closely with the Hospital Association to address common ground issues including legislative goals, tort reform, problems with organ procurement, and to discuss ethical concerns such as futile care.

Serving Together

We need to encourage more physicians to serve on community boards, councils, and commissions, and to be more active in local and state politics. We intend to forge closer relationships with business and industry, with the North Carolina Bar Association, with the North Carolina Academy of Trial Lawyers, and with the North Carolina Coalition Against Domestic Violence, which will sponsor with us a conference next spring that will address the serious problem of battering in our state.

Within our own organization, Gene Mayer will chair a task force on Society governance to explore the role of the councilors, the district system, the feasibility of granting commissioners voting privileges on the Executive Council, and other issues. Society members can participate in this process by sending suggestions and by contacting me, the officers, or the committee chairs with your ideas.

Assad Meymandi will chair a new task force on domestic violence, which will work closely with the legal profession, public health officials, the Alliance, and those civic organizations that see violence as a public health issue and are committed to discovering together an effective treatment.

Members of the Old North State Medical Society have graciously agreed to serve as consultants on many of our committees this year. I hope that, under the leadership of Grimes Byerly, chair of the Membership Committee, we can work out affiliate memberships between our organizations and visibly increase membership in the NCMS and the Alliance.

Sharing Together

We need to share more equitably the responsibility of caring for those patients who are underserved throughout the state, particularly patients with AIDS and sexually transmitted diseases. We need to share the responsibility of caring for our senior citizens, especially the real difficulties that Medicare patients confront in finding a physician. Darlene Menscer, our second vice president, will spearhead our efforts at grappling with these problems.

We will share our intellectual and scientific strengths through the formation of a Science and Technology Committee. This committee will consist of a faculty member from each of our four medical schools, one member each from the School of Public Health and the public health sector of state government and, as on all of our committees, a student and resident member. Under the leadership of Harvey Estes, this committee will receive scientific information from many sources and will report on what is relevant and important for transmission to the Society. In addition, the committee will serve as a resource on technical and medical matters for the news media, governmental agencies, organizations, and others who need authoritative, science-based information to guide policies and decisions.

Sharing also means your support of the North Carolina Medical Society Foundation, created in 1966 as a non-profit corporation and organized exclusively for charitable, educational, and scientific purposes. The Foundation manages the Kate B. Reynolds Community Practitioners Program, which not only recruits medical personnel desperately needed in underserved areas, but also organizes locum tenens support by staff from family medicine residency programs so that our colleagues in these areas can have time off for educational or recreational leave. Furthermore, the involvement of lay persons on the Foundation's Board of Trustees is a superb opportunity for us to reach beyond ourselves to others in our communities.

The Foundation served as the fiscal intermediary for the Physicians Health and Effectiveness Program, which has been so successful in identifying and rehabilitating impaired physicians. The success of PHEP is such that it will soon become a separate organization of its own.

For me, the Foundation symbolizes the essence of medicine as a profession. Those past presidents of our Society who have endowed lectureships for the Spring Conference have dedicated their personal energies and a significant part of their financial resources to ensure that our generation and future generations of North Carolina physicians will, on an annual basis, be privileged to hear and exchange views with the best minds in the country. Those of you who contribute to the Foundation help enormously to fulfill the goals of the Society and to promote new programs without expending dues dollars.

My Challenge

I see the challenge of my year ahead, and I now feel ready to abandon the "funky shoes" that Reporter Tinker Ready managed to notice when she interviewed me for the Raleigh News and Observer's "Tarheel of the Week." Remember Kate Thomas' statement on women's capabilities?—"Ginger Rogers did everything that Fred Astaire did but she had to do it backwards and in high heels." I stand before you today in my medium heels. With your continued friendship and active participation, and with the love and support of my husband and family I hope to be standing before you a year from now in my high heels. □

These FAST changing times force physicians to see more patients for less compensation while struggling to maintain high patient care standards. The ONLY answer is to practice with higher efficiency. However, statistics demonstrate that outdated office procedures are the norm resulting in the CERTAINTY of lost time, lower standards of patient care and reduced revenue. Just a few statistics in areas where the Pen-Based Network can help:

- 38% of a doctor's time is spent writing charts.
- 50% of a nurse's time is spent writing charts.
- In 30% of patient visits, the medical record is inaccessible.
- 11% of laboratory tests have to be reordered because the results are not in the chart.

What is the Pen-Based Medical Network?

It uses a hand-held, light-weight, mobile, electronic chart. The physician writes directly on the electronic chart. No keyboards. The notes are captured automatically, permanently stored in the computer, easily accessible, and linked to x-ray, billing, etc. Same day automatic billing. No transcribing. Clerical help reduced. And all departments can communicate.

Conjoint Report

To the North Carolina Medical Society and the North Carolina Commission for Health Services

Ronald H. Levine, M.D., M.P.H.

Editor's note: Dr. Levine, North Carolina's state health director, delivered the following message at the Medical Society's Annual Meeting in Charlotte in November 1993.

I write again to brief you on public health issues of importance, courtesy of the legislator who, years ago, convinced our General Assembly to place this obligation of the State Health Director squarely within North Carolina's General Statutes. I hope that my comments on these topics, including a public health perspective on the health system reform debate, will be of interest to you.

Sexually Transmitted Diseases and AIDS

After North Carolina had achieved the dubious distinction of ranking second among the states in primary and secondary syphilis morbidity, we feel we may have turned a corner in the perennial battle that we, along with the other Southern states and major urban areas, wage against this and other sexually transmitted diseases. During the first two-thirds of this year, the stepped-up efforts of our field epidemiology staff has yielded a 24% decrease in cases. At the same time, the incidence of that most horrific of preventable diseases, congenital syphilis, is beginning to wane although we are likely to tally as many as 50 cases before the end of 1993. We hope this trend continues so that, with the help of a high index of suspicion and a commitment to repeated prenatal serology testing by the state's doctors, we can once again eliminate congenital syphilis as a problem in our state.

It is very difficult to interpret the slope of the epidemic curve for AIDS in North Carolina. The recently liberalized definition of AIDS has led to cases being reported that would not have been included under the old definition. Nevertheless, what we do know gives scant comfort; indeed it is rather alarming. AIDS is now the number one killer of young men in this state and ranks eighth for young women. The seropositivity rate for HIV among non-white pregnant women in some of our metropolitan counties approaches 1%. Many of the babies born to these women will die from pediatric AIDS. In fact, our minority community is facing a crisis of huge dimensions; more than 75% of new HIV infections occur in people of color. We desperately need resources for both community-wide and targeted prevention and education programs. We hope and pray that the need will be recognized by those in both the public and private sectors who have the ability to lend a hand.

Speaking of lending a hand, I ask the practicing physicians and dentists of this state to help shoulder the burden of primary care for those suffering from AIDS. Our tertiary care centers are literally staggering under the load of patients who come long distances at great inconvenience and expense, patients who could quite effectively be cared for in their own or neighboring communities until their disease becomes so complex, demanding, and difficult that the expertise of the AIDS specialist is required. I am very proud of the primary care physicians of Asheville who have worked out an arrangement to share this burden equitably among themselves so that no one physician is unduly burdened. I am asking the leadership of the Society to join with me, our superb medical centers, and our state's excellent AIDS training institute to develop a program that will provide quality, compassionate care close to home for just as long as that is in the patient's best interests.

Immunization of Children

We will also be joining the Medical Society in what promises to be a colossal effort to raise the percentage of our young children who are immunized. A major public awareness campaign, an effort to make local health departments and other clinics more "user-friendly," a statewide computerized immunization registry that will reach right into our practicing physicians' offices, greater availability of free vaccine wherever infants and young children go for their care, relaxed consent and confidentiality laws and rules—all of these as well as a host of additional measures will enable us to meet the goal of having 90% of our two-year-olds up to date on immunizations by the year 2000. I am very optimistic that this public/private collaboration will be one of the most successful in our history.

Rabies in North Carolina

Last year I warned you that our previously rabies-free state was being threatened on three sides by the incursion of wildlife-borne rabies. I must report to you that the epidemic is here, placing our pets and domestic animals and, more importantly, our families at serious risk. Before the end of 1993, we will have had more than 100 cases of rabies in our state. We have had reports of rabid cats literally chasing and attacking their owners.

Physician knowledge of this disease and its prevention is critical. There have been no treatment failures in the U.S. when appropriate post-exposure patient management procedures are followed. The greatest risk to humans occurs when exposure to rabies goes unattended. Once symptoms appear, the illness is almost always fatal. Thus it is crucial that physicians abide by the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Immunization: treat the wound, administer rabies-immune globulin, and vaccinate with five doses of human diploid cell vaccine.

Infant Mortality and Maternal Health

I am particularly pleased to report a further decline in North Carolina's infant mortality rate from 10.6 deaths per 1,000 live births in 1991 to 9.2 per 1,000 in 1992. This is the lowest infant mortality rate in the history of our state. In order to maintain this trend, our service delivery system has expanded its efforts to reach women at risk for poor pregnancy outcomes. During 1993 almost 40,000 high-risk pregnant women received maternity care coordination services from nurses and social workers assigned to assist these women in obtaining proper and timely medical and community support services. Our studies have firmly established that both infant mortality and low- and very low-birthweight births were significantly reduced among women receiving these outreach services.

I am also happy to report that in 1992 there was a 5% decline in the rate of adolescent pregnancy. This represents an 11% decline since 1989. This is good news, but far too many adolescents in this state still opt to take on the onerous burden of parenthood before their time. According to the Center for Population Options, 25% of all teen mothers go on welfare, and two-thirds of children younger than age six in families begun by a teen birth live in poverty. We still have much to do to deal with the problem of children having children.

Public Health: Present and Future

I want to close with a few thoughts from the public health family regarding health system reform. I am pleased that I don't have to exhort you (as I did in 1992) to get off the sidelines and into the action. I had the pleasure of attending one of the Society's public forums on this subject and it was obvious to me that the Society is taking very seriously the obligation to educate and inform its members and the public as well.

I am more than pleased that the recurring themes of my past reports—on ensuring timely mammograms, Pap smears, smoking cessation, and so on—are reflected in the strong support of organized medicine for clinical preventive medicine. And for preventive practices that are adequately emphasized and reimbursed.

I do have two more concerns to share with you. I request your understanding and, I hope, your advocacy. The first has to do with the purpose of this entire monumental effort to restructure the manner in which health services are financed and delivered. Over and over we hear that the goals of restructuring are: 1) To provide universal access to quality health care; 2) To constrain out-of-control health care costs. To quote the incomparable Peggy Lee, "Is that all there is?" Are we really going to subject providers and patients to such wrenching reformulation of roles, responsibilities, and relationships without setting as a third and possibly more important objective: "To achieve improved health status?"

We must not be concerned just with the level of expenditures on health care in this country and the resulting impact on our ability to remain competitive in the global marketplace; we must recognize and do something about the fact that, in spite of these expenditures, our great nation ranks so low among the developed nations in so many measures of health status. I ask that as you consider and participate in a renewed emphasis on beneficial outcomes for individual patients, please think also of outcome measures for all of our people, for North Carolinians, for Native Americans, for premature babies and so on. Help us ensure that systems are in place to quantify these outcomes and more importantly, to assure that a healthier America remains our goal.

And, finally, I ask you to do all you can as individuals, as community leaders and as members of the North Carolina Medical Society to see that your public health clinics are adequately supported until the arrival of the health reform millennium. Then we may have the privately operated, accountable health care plans to care for all, and we will truly have one system of care, and the distinctions between public/private may at last be erased. Those of us in the public health system,

"I ask you to do all you can...to see that your public health clinics are adequately supported until the arrival of the health reform millennium."

particularly in the South with its longstanding major commitment to clinical services for the underserved and the difficult-to-serve, are concerned that there exists the belief that we can "close up shop" in anticipation of the new era. You and I know better. We will continue to assist you in your care for those who need assistance and encouragement, whose priorities revolve around putting a meal on the table and rather than on continuing comprehensive care, who can't speak English, who need the services of the nutritionist, the outreach worker and the public health nurse.

I ask you to advocate, during this interim as we wait to see what reform will do for us, for your public health system and, I might add, for your migrant, rural, and community health clinics so that access to care does not actually become less during the transition. I ask this in the knowledge that private practitioners and public health practitioners in the Tarheel State have bonded long ago and will continue to work together for what is best for the people of North Carolina. □

DEWEES ISLAND, A PRIVATE OCEANFRONT RETREAT TO CALL YOUR OWN... MINUTES FROM CHARLESTON, SC

number of homes on the 1,206-acre island to only 150.

The location of the island is extraordinary...its pristine surroundings are perfect for fresh & saltwater fishing, crabbing, shrimping, and oystering, yet it's just minutes to downtown Charleston and the Charleston International Airport. It truly is an island like nowhere else in the world.

Come explore this private, oceanfront retreat...but don't wait too long. Over 30 percent of the available sites have been sold.

Prices start at $150,000, with 2-acre oceanfront lots from $315,000.

Physician/Hospital Organizations

Integrating the Delivery of Health Care

Arlene J. Diosegy and Steven D. Simpson

The health care industry has changed dramatically in the past 10 years. Hospitals and physicians have already adapted to Medicare's implementation of a Prospective Payment System (PPS) and a Resource-Based Relative Value Scale schedule for physician's fees. Now doctors and hospitals are becoming more interdependent as they respond to increasing competition, cost control pressures from third-party payers, the rapid emergence of managed care programs, and greater governmental scrutiny and intervention. Washington's rush to health care reform, and the trend toward "managed care" and "managed competition," have led to greater cooperation among hospitals and their medical staffs. We are beginning to see the emergence of physician/hospital organizations (PHOs). Their rapid spread has come to North Carolina.

No doubt, the rising costs of health care and the rhetoric of the "health care crisis" will spur additional profound, structural changes in our health care system. The various proposals for health care reform rely to some extent on integrated health care delivery, managed care, or both to provide efficient, high-quality health services to all Americans. We discuss the factors that have led to the creation of PHOs (a partially integrated delivery system): the legacy of prospective payment, the growth of managed care, and health care reform proposals.

The Need for PHOs

Prospective payment. Implementation of prospective payment by Medicare in 1983 introduced new incentives to the health care system. Instead of rewarding hospitals with higher payments to reimburse costs of additional services, the PPS rewarded hospitals for quicker and more efficient diagnosis, treatment, and discharge. Even commercial insurance carriers are now considering PPS-type reimbursement systems. Innovative hospitals and health care systems recognized the incentives inherent in PPS and responded by the development of PHOs in which:

1. Diagnosis can occur before hospitalization by using comprehensive outpatient diagnostic and ancillary service centers such as freestanding imaging centers or cardiac catheterization centers.

2. Hospitalization can sometimes be avoided by using alternative treatment centers or programs such as ambulatory surgery centers or freestanding radiation therapy centers.

3. Hospital patients can be discharged more quickly to the care of "down stream" alternative providers like comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facilities, home health agencies, home intravenous therapy providers, and nursing facilities.

Health care reform. In 1990, 36 million Americans reportedly had no health insurance. Access to affordable health care has become an important feature of the domestic policy agenda. Despite the need for more services, in 1992 the U.S. spent $838.5 billion on health care, an increase of 11.5% over 1991; in 1993, the U.S. will spend more than $939.9 billion, a further increase of 12.1% over 1992. Health care spending is forecasted to increase annually by as much as 15%. Because of these figures, the Clinton Administration, the state General Assembly, and health care policy groups have discussed initiatives for reforming health care access and financing. Most proposals fall into one of four categories based on philosophical policy differences: mandated benefits (pay or play), single payer, market reform, or managed competition. The Clinton Administration appears to favor the managed competition approach.

The Emergence of PHOs

PHOs may play an important role as North Carolina health care providers structure their response to the external factors that effect the climate of medical practice. There are four currently prevalent types of organizations:

1. The management service organization. Under this structure a hospital supplies office administration services, billing or computer services, and the like to physicians whose time is thereby freed to provide medical services to patients. This type of PHO can be established simply by the participants entering into appropriate contractual arrangements.

2. The "clinic without walls." Physicians in unrelated medical groups and specialties, often as part of a preferred provider agreement, create a practice to provide medical services to patients. This type of organization may avoid violating antitrust laws, and also may alleviate Medicare scrutiny regarding fraud and abuse. A clinic without walls may stand alone as a physician organization or be organized with a PHO.

3. The medical foundation. In cooperation or affiliation with a local hospital, a tax-exempt organization is created to directly provide professional medical and perhaps hospital services to patients. At present, this entity is primarily a West Coast phenomenon.

4. The integrated health care delivery system. The IDS is a variation of the medical foundation model. It involves the creation of a tax-exempt organization, frequently a medical foundation, to purchase professional medical practices. The foundation contracts with the staff physicians for provision of medical services to patients. Representatives of the affiliated hospital and IDS physicians serve on the board of the medical foundation. Contractual arrangements between hospital and foundation establish the medical services that will be offered and delineate the rights and responsibilities of each party in terms of billing, insurance coverage, and similar matters.

Objectives of PHOs

The goal of a PHO is to allow the hospital and physician members to act as a cohesive health care entity. In starting a PHO, one must consider these management and practice items:

- ✓ The balance of hospital and physician interests in terms of control, governance, program opportunities, and internal incentives offered to physicians.
- ✓ Tax status of the PHO; Medicare fraud and abuse concerns.
- ✓ How to minimize change and still provide new, innovative programs that meet competition and seize opportunities.
- ✓ How to maintain the independence of the physicians' medical practice and the autonomy of the hospital.
- ✓ How to reduce potential conflict between the hospital and the medical staff by making sure that new programs are joint initiatives rather than unilateral changes, and that the economic and professional tensions of prospective payment, managed care, and other cost-containing measures are addressed.
- ✓ How to improve the PHO's competitive posture by adopting tools that organized health plans and large systems use to efficiently provide quality care: effectiveness review, strategic planning, advanced marketing, vertical integration, and private capital financing.

Fig. 1: Physician/hospital organization

- ✓ How to be flexible about the "form" in which third party payers reimburse for services; prepayment, prospective payment, and fee-for-service are not mutually exclusive.
- ✓ How to create new, selective, health care risk pools rather than relying solely on others to create such pools of patients.
- ✓ Recognizing that competition between the hospital and physicians may be self-defeating in the long run. Selling traditional hospital services in competition with the physicians may reduce hospital volume (and revenues), cause cost increases in the short run, and perhaps curtail hospital services in the long run. Similarly, competition by physicians for patient referrals may merely undercut the hospital's traditional referral network.

Design of a PHO. The PHO uses the straightforward device of creating a new, freestanding entity to avoid the common pitfalls of working directly through existing hospital or medical staff structures. Figure 1, above, shows a general schematic diagram for a PHO. The concept is quite simple and very flexible although the number of options created by that flexibility sometimes obscures its simplicity.

The hub of the PHO is PHO Central, an entity created by the hospital and the physicians. It has three purposes:

1. To provide a forum for establishing joint policy and strategic plans through a governing board comprised of hospital and physician representatives.
2. To identify, evaluate, and develop health care venture opportunities of mutual interest and benefit to the hospital and physicians. PHO Central may own or control these ventures.
3. To develop and provide each PHO venture with the management tools necessary to operate. The management costs are spread over a number of activities or ventures.

PHO Central can be a partnership, a for-profit, or a non-profit corporation depending on legal analysis of the specific objectives of the parties, state and federal and corporate and tax laws, and the method by which new ventures are to be financed (equity contributions, taxable debt financing, or tax-exempt bond financing, as may be applicable).

PHO Central is controlled by the hospital and a physician entity composed of the physicians on the active medical staff at the hospital who individually participate in the PHO. The board of directors includes representatives of both the hospital and physicians.

PHO Central allows the hospital and a group of physicians to undertake one or more specific ventures. Physician members can pick and choose among PHO ventures; they need not participate in all or, in fact, any. There are numerous potential PHO ventures. Anything that effects hospitals or physicians can be considered as long as physician ownership or involvement is consistent with state and federal law. There are three major PHO venture types:

Competitive health plan ventures: These include any competitive plan that markets the services of physicians and the hospital as a combined package of health care benefits. Included are HMOs, preferred provider organizations, and other approaches, such as an exclusive provider organization.

Innovative health facility/service ventures: A PHO can sponsor many of the health facility/service ventures currently being pursued independently by hospitals, physicians, and non-provider entrepreneurs (imaging centers, urgent care centers, ambulatory surgery centers, etc.). PHO sponsorship removes a measure of the animosity and intramural competition often attached to these projects when pursued independently.

Financing opportunities: From time to time, both the hospital and the various PHO ventures will need to acquire capital assets. Financing the lease or purchase of expensive equipment involves PHO Central in both cash flow analysis and an examination of the tax burdens or benefits to be derived.

A Formalized PHO: The IDS

An integrated health care delivery system is perhaps the most formal of the four common types of PHO. The formation of an IDS involves the creation of a tax-exempt organization to contract with participating physicians for professional medical services. The organization may purchase the assets of private medical practices or clinics formerly maintained by the participating physicians. Professional service contracts are structured to fit within one or more of the legal "safe harbors" promulgated by the Office of Inspector General of the Department of Health and Human Services and thereby avoid any concerns of fraud or abuse arising from the organization's payment of professional fees to the physicians.

Since an IDS is a new, formal legal entity, its structure is often more complicated than that of management service organizations, clinics without walls, or medical foundations (Figure 2, right, shows the delivery of systems). The IDS typically provides the following:

- ✓ Physician primary care and specialty care

- ✓ Outpatient diagnostic and ancillary services such as freestanding imaging centers or cardiac catheterization centers
- ✓ Alternative treatment centers such as ambulatory surgery centers and freestanding radiation therapy centers
- ✓ Acute care hospitals
- ✓ Post-acute care providers such as comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facilities, nursing facilities, home health agencies, durable medical equipment suppliers, and home intravenous therapy
- ✓ Insurance, HMOs, or managed care programs

Organization of an IDS

Vertical integration is a primary thrust of today's health care marketplace, but there is no single organizational model for an IDS. The variety of existing models reflects more the time period in which a given system emerged or the local political factors of a given health care community than it does any quintessential corporate organizational planning. A review of the various corporate models suggests that the basic premises of an IDS should be simplicity and flexibility.

That said, it appears that the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) currently favors the Section 501(c)(3) tax-exempt organization as the structure for an IDS and for the subsequent conduct of its health care services. The IRS recently granted exemption to two organizations qualifying as medical foundations operating an IDS. The IRS specifically allowed the tax-exempt medical foundations to purchase the tangible and intangible assets of physicians' practices or multispecialty group clinics, specifically including patient records as items to which part of the purchase price was allocated.

The IRS also allowed foundations and selling physicians to enter into professional service agreements for the provision of future medical services in return for reasonable compensation. Medical foundations can arrange for the provision of professional medical services through contracts with physicians, but such contracts should not require or anticipate that patients be referred to a particular hospital, whether or not it is operated by the medical foundation. The medical foundation itself need not operate a hospital in order to qualify for exemption.

Recent IRS rulings indicate that physicians should make up no more than 20% of the board of directors of an IDS medical foundation. The 20% limitation may not be appropriate in all cases, and the IRS may be willing to consider facts and circumstances in determining whether an organization qualifies for exemption as a Section 501(c)(3) charitable organization.

The IRS will allow a Section 501(c)(3) medical foundation to purchase the assets of a private medical practice or clinic and allow it to execute appropriate contracts with the selling physicians to provide future medical services. Due to the developing area of the law on this issue, we recommend obtaining advance IRS approval of any proposed IDS.

Recommendations for Forming a PHO

North Carolina hospitals and physicians who want to create a PHO might proceed as follows:

1. Obtain the firm support of key hospital management and board members toward the PHO concept.
2. Once there is hospital interest, explore the creation of a PHO with a representative panel of key physician leaders. Do not proceed further without strong physician interest.
3. Given mutual interest by physicians and hospital leaders, form a PHO task force comprised of physicians, hospital administrators, and board members. The task force must undertake the necessary legal research, develop a business plan for one or more initial PHO ventures, roughly assess feasibility of the proposed PHO, and make a formal recommendation for board and physician action. The task force needs a defined deadline for completing its efforts (minimum 90 days), the authority to incur costs ($10,000 to $100,000, depending on the nature of the selected PHO ventures), and authority to retain management consultants (if desired) and legal counsel experienced in PHO formation and development.
4. The task force should deal first with selecting initial PHO ventures that reflect concrete needs or opportunities and generate broad interest within the medical staff.
5. Once initial PHO ventures are selected, the task force should turn the business plan development and feasibility assessment over to its staff. The task force then can focus on PHO organization, control, and structure and each of the proposed PHO ventures. The task force will need legal counsel, and the hospital and the physicians may need separate legal advice.

6. After the organizational design, business plans, and feasibility estimates are complete, the physician task force members should present the salient features at a staff meeting. No formal action is necessary (or desirable), but the physician members of the task force need to assess carefully the degree of support from their colleagues.
7. The task force should present its formal assessment and recommendations to the hospital board and ask for a commitment to form the PHO, contingent on appropriate physician participation.
8. If the board's response is positive, PHO Central would be created. Task force members could act as the incorporators and interim governing board of PHO Central.
9. PHO Central must then solicit physician participation by a direct mailing to eligible members of the medical staff, allowing 30 to 60 days for response.
10. If the level of physician participation meets previous specifications, the hospital board ratifies its commitment to the PHO, votes the necessary funds, and selects its representatives to the PHO Central governing board.
11. Participating physicians then elect directly, or through a physician entity, representatives to the PHO Central governing board.

Other Ways to Develop an IDS

A PHO is not an absolute prerequisite to the development of an IDS. Some hospitals have established partial IDSs by helping their medical staff create individual practice associations that facilitate patient entry into managed care. Others have helped establish alternative diagnostic and ancillary care centers or providers of post-acute care within the hospital system.

Given the changes in payment systems, the growth of managed care, and other factors in the health care marketplace, many physicians seek the security of employment by group practices, HMOs, and hospitals. North Carolina hospitals have begun to establish affiliated group practices, sometimes controlling those practices by limiting enrollment to hospital staff physicians or through a non-profit corporation over which the hospital has effective control. By bringing the hospital and physicians together under hospital management, the nucleus of an IDS is established. It can be fleshed out by creating the complementary diagnostic and ancillary providers, alternative care providers, post-acute care providers, and managed care products within the hospital system.

Proposed health care reforms focus public and media attention on the health care industry, which is under intense pressure to limit or curtail costs while continuing to provide quality care. The PHO may be an important component of the health care industry's response to these external pressures. □

Business Owners Fight Back! Discover The 10 Tax Saving Secrets The IRS and Congress Didn't Want Them to Know

Raleigh, NC — John was really mad now. "I can't believe I'm getting nailed this bad. I seem to be supporting the national debt myself!" he thought to himself.

Once again, he had to write a big check with his tax return. Once again he had been told by his "tax advisor" that, "There is nothing you can do about it. You know that we're doing all that we can. Besides, your business is cash flowing nicely, and paying taxes ("Your Fair Share") is a good problem to have."

Somehow John knew that his accountant had to be working for the IRS. "He must be. Why would he be so willing to roll over and play dead for the government?" This same accountant had advised him to change tax status to an S-Corp in 1987 under the promise of lower taxes forever. And now, after Clinton's new tax bill, this same advice would have him paying federal taxes at 39.6%, state taxes at 7%, and social security payroll taxes of 7.65% (times 2) in 1993 and beyond.

As John painfully subtracted the amount of the check made payable to the IRS from his checkbook he was staring at a pile of unread newspapers and financial reports on his desk. A headline in yesterday's financial newspaper caught his attention, "Business Owners Face 50% Marginal Tax Rates Once Again! New Tax Bills Pending in Congress to Raise Taxes Further and Cut Pension Benefits for Business Owners."

John started to get anxious. He read the article and began to feel helpless. The reporter explained how small business owners were catching the brunt of all the new taxes, and how Congress felt everyone should pay more, and 50% taxes on business owners should not be a burden.

The story went on to warn of Hilliary's health care proposal and how S-income would be subject to FICA taxes for business owners, how popular age-based profit sharing plans would be repealed, and so on. The story ended by stating that while new taxes were inevitable, many creative strategies still existed to reduce taxes legally and most business owners were ignorant or had poor advisors who were unaware of the tax saving secrets the IRS and Congress preferred Small Business didn't know about. "If business owners only knew the many ways to legally reduce taxes they wouldn't complain so loudly!" the article ended.

John had had enough. "I'm going to fight back legally! I'll never again be a patsy!" He knew that starting tomorrow he was going to stop complaining and take action.

As he picked up the telephone, he vowed that he was going to learn "The 10 Tax Saving Secrets The IRS and Congress Didn't want him to Know." A copy of this FREE REPORT is available by calling the 24 hour toll-free recorded message line listed below.

Alzheimer's Disease

AN OVERVIEW

What is Alzheimer's Disease?

Alzheimer's Disease is a progressive degenerative disease that attacks the brain and results in impaired memory, thinking and behavior. It affects an estimated 2.5 million American adults. It usually has a gradual onset. Problems remembering recent events and difficulty performing familiar tasks are early symptoms. Additionally, the Alzheimer patient also may experience confusion, personality change, behavior change, impaired judgment, and difficulty finding words, finishing thoughts or following directions. How quickly these changes occur will vary from person to person, but the disease eventually leaves its victims totally unable to care for themselves.

Risk Factors

The primary risk factor for Alzheimer's Disease is age. As our population ages—which it is doing rapidly, thanks to medical advances and better health habits—more people will have Alzheimer's Disease because there will be more aged people. At present, over 4% of people over 65 and about 15% of people over 85 have Alzheimer's Disease. That's over 2 million people in the United States.

Another major risk factor is gender since most studies find a preponderance of women with Alzheimer's Disease. However, the aged population contains more women than men anyway, and women are more likely to see a physician, so the preponderance in women may not actually be that great.

There may be a genetic link to Alzheimer's Disease: Down's syndrome is a clear risk factor. Down's syndrome results in mental retardation and other birth defects. People with Down's syndrome have an extra chromosome 21. If they survive into middle age, these individuals frequently develop changes in the brain that are identical to those in Alzheimer's Disease. The similarities between premature aging of the brain in Down's syndrome patients and the Alzheimer brain have been the basis of several important research efforts.

Geography may be a risk factor, but no true patterns have yet been found. Alzheimer's Disease is more prevalent in blacks than in whites, so race may also be a risk factor. One study found that Alzheimer's Disease patients were more likely to have suffered past head trauma. So far, that's the only preventable possible risk factor.

Several risk factors have been examined and eliminated: thyroid disease, low socioeconomic status, and aluminum exposure.

History

Dr. Alois Alzheimer, a German neurologist, described the first Alzheimer's Disease patient in 1906. She was 51 years old, was experiencing psychiatric and behavioral problems, including a persistent but untrue belief that her husband was unfaithful to her. Her disease progressed rapidly and she encountered memory problems and increased language difficulties. She became unable to write, speak or communicate at all and she developed profound intellectual deficits, incontinence and seizures. In five years she was dead.

Diagnosis

There is no specific diagnostic test for Alzheimer's Disease. The diagnosis is clinical and is confirmed only after death because there is no way to biopsy the brain to examine the cells for the typical cellular changes that are characteristic of Alzheimer's.

Arriving at the Diagnosis

The typical basic evaluation of the suspected Alzheimer's Disease patient will usually include the following:

- 1) A social and medical history given by both the patient and a relative or close friend.
- 2) A complete physical examination.
- 3) A neuropsychological examination testing sensory and motor functions, mental status and verbal, intellectual and reasoning abilities.
- 4) A face-hand test in which a person closes his or her eyes and tells the examiner where he or she feels a touch.
- 5) A mental status questionnaire which tests mental alertness. It asks such questions as "Who is the President?" "When is your Birthday?"
- 6) A test of memory for digits. This tests a person's ability to remember numbers and repeat them.
- 7) A "misplaced objects" test during which a person is asked to place pictures of familiar objects in correct places, such as kitchens and bedrooms.

- 8) Pencil and paper tests used by psychologists to determine a person's mental condition.
- 9) A clinical interview by a psychologist or psychiatrist to determine emotional status.
- 10) A CAT scan to see if there is obvious brain damage over time.
- 11) A PET scan which measures the brain's use of glucose. A person with Alzheimer's Disease uses less glucose than normal people.
- 12) An EEG which measures electrical activity in the brain.
- 13) A lumbar puncture or spinal tap.
- 14) A blood test which may pinpoint possible causes of the memory impairment but cannot diagnose Alzheimer's Disease.

In the end, biopsy of the brain is the final proof, arrived at only after the death of the Alzheimer's Disease patient.

The Phases of Alzheimer's Disease

Alzheimer's Disease has four specific phases. In the first phase, a person may seem tired, lacking energy or initiative. There may be a tendency to shun new places or to meet new people; in other words, the familiar is much preferred. But this stage is so insidious that family members may not even react or notice changes in the person. In the second stage the losses become noticeable. Speech slows, balancing a check-book becomes impossible, so financial embarrassment may occur: unpaid bills or an overdrawn account. At this stage the person continues to function, but supervision becomes important.

...learn about the illness, about community resources, about finding legal and financial advice, about how to handle the person.

Disability is the catchword of the third phase. The person becomes disoriented to time and place. He or she fails to recognize people or recall recent events. There is lethargy, a need for frequently repeated instructions and directions. The person makes up new words, behaves strangely, but may have an astonishingly clear remembrance of the remote past.

By the fourth state the persons wanders, needs near constant assistance with ordinary activities, loses even more of the recent memory and begins to lose remote memory as well. Words and phrases are repeated. Recognition of self and others disappears. Depression, delusion or delirium may occur. Institutionalization looms on the horizon.

Treatment

At the moment there is much exciting research into treatments for Alzheimer's Disease, searching for a means to eradicate the troublesome symptoms in the brain. These include experimental brain cell implants which have reportedly had some success in patients with Parkinson's Disease in Mexico.

For the present, however, treatments aim to alleviate such symptoms as anxiety, sleep disturbance and depression. While these are extremely important for both the person and the caregiver, they are only temporary stop-gap measures. The progression of Alzheimer's Disease is inexorable.

The average Alzheimer's Disease patient lives nine years after diagnosis, but there is great variability within the range. Patients may live months to years unable to walk or speak, incontinent of bladder and bowel, totally dependent on others, but usually just one: The caregiver.

Coping

Once the diagnosis is made and accepted, the burden falls directly, though relatively briefly, on the patient. It falls simultaneously and awfully on the caregiver. This is the other victim and he or she will have important needs to be met in coming months and years:

- 1) Emotional support is essential. Giving care to an erratic, demanding Alzheimer's Disease person is an emotional rollercoaster. The burden must be shared.
- 2) Information. The caregiver must learn about the illness, about community resources, about finding legal and financial advice, about how to handle the person.
- 3) Psychological understanding. The caregiver must learn to analyze the person's actions, to understand non-verbal communication, to discuss the phases of grief and the diffusion of anger.
- 4) Relationships. It is sad but true that dealing with friendships that end is important, because people stop coming by, and younger family members sometime react inappropriately to the person's behavior.
- 5) Self-Care. Caregivers cannot neglect themselves, mentally or physically. When both the person and caregiver are ill and unable to cope, there could be serious trouble.
- 6) Outlook. It is important for the spouse to develop a new philosophy of life. He or she will need help to escape a tendency to depression, loss of hope and disillusionment.
- 7) Logistics of caregiving. It sounds simple but it isn't. Someone must get the person fed, dressed, and out for a walk or drive.
- 8) Grieving. At some point the relationship between the Alzheimer's Disease person and the caregiver ends. Depending on the cause of the separation, the caregiver may experience grieving at death, often with remorse and guilt, or may encounter intense loneliness when the patient enters a nursing home, also accompanied by great guilt.

Alzheimer's Disease is a family problem. The biggest burden in the family usually falls to the spouse, often when that person is older, maybe in not so good health. Children play an important role as well—usually female children—by relieving or replacing an overwrought or absent caregiver.

But some other important issues must be dealt with as Alzheimer's Disease progresses. Included here are healthcare, legal and financial decisions.

Healthcare issues are increasingly cost-dependent and cost-driven. Medicare unfortunately is of little to no help with Alzheimer's Disease. Medicare is designed for acute care, but Alzheimer's Disease is a chronic condition. Because of the length of time patients with Alzheimer's Disease tend to live, the disease becomes an incredible economic burden. The answer for the spouse often is to "spend down," to become eligible for Medicaid in order to place the patient—at Medicaid expense—in an appropriate facility, if possible.

One of the hallmarks of medical care—the confidentiality and inviolability of the doctor-patient relationship—comes into question when the patient's diagnosis is Alzheimer's Disease. Soon the patient will be unable to discuss symptoms and make treatment choices. To whom does the physician turn for the needed information and decisions? Often the appropriate response is to the caregiver who has arranged legal transfer of guardianship to himself or herself, including the right to make healthcare decisions for the patient. In this circumstance the caregiver can also make other legal decisions: to sell a house or stock, for example. The legal activities must be done early enough, while the patient is still capable of agreeing with them.

Another healthcare fact to be confronted is the right to die or not to continue to live if a threatening illness befalls the patient with Alzheimer's Disease. North Carolina has a right to a natural death law, and living wills are legal. It is up to the person and caregiver to be certain the physician and all others involved in the patient's care are aware of—and concur with—their feelings on the question of prolonging dying.

Another legal issue is a will. While the person's will must be updated and legally signed during his or her relative health, the caregiver's will must not be forgotten. If the caregiver dies, little should be left to the person who cannot enjoy the gifts and whose eligibility for federal assistance might be delayed or jeopardized if there were a sudden financial windfall. Estate and inheritance taxes can be minimized with good legal and financial advice.

For specific legal and financial and other assistance, the best possible source of information is a support group. Comprised of others who know firsthand the frustrations and complexities of caring for someone with Alzheimer's Disease, support groups are immensely helpful to the caregiver. Members will know of available respite caregivers, of the best nursing homes, of the federal assistance plans that work and are accessible. Most importantly, they can empathize—they've been there or they are there.

Glossary of Terms

Dementia

This is not a disease in itself but a group of symptoms that characterize certain diseases and conditions. The major symptoms involve a decline in intellectual functioning that is severe enough to interfere with routine activities. Alzheimer's Disease is the most common form of dementia.

Senility

This label often was used to describe an individual 65 years or older with dementia. Senility used to be considered a normal part of aging. Today, physicians recognize that dementia is not a normal part of aging but the result of a disease such as Alzheimer's Disease.

Senile dementia/pre-senile dementia

Senile dementia is a label that used to apply to patients whose symptoms of dementia appeared after age 65. Pre-senile dementia is a label that used to apply to dementia victims who were younger than age 65. These distinctions have largely been eliminated. Today, most cases of dementia in both groups of patients are diagnosed as Alzheimer's Disease.

Chronic organic brain syndrome

This label is sometimes given to patients with a collection of symptoms such as memory loss, disorientation, confusion, personality changes and inability to carry out normal daily activities. The preferred term for these symptoms is dementia or dementing illness.

Hardening of the arteries

The correct medical term is arteriosclerosis. The dementia symptoms associated with arteriosclerosis result only when multiple cerebral infarcts (strokes) have occurred. This condition is called multi-infarct dementia.

YOCON[®]

YOHIMBINE HCl

Description: Yohimbine is a 3a-15a-20B-17a-hydroxy Yohimbine-16a-carboxylic acid methyl ester. The alkaloid is found in Rubaceae and related trees. Also in Rauwolfia Serpentina (L) Benth. Yohimbine is an indolalkylamine alkaloid with chemical similarity to reserpine. It is a crystalline powder, odorless. Each compressed tablet contains (1/12 gr.) 5.4 mg of Yohimbine Hydrochloride.

Action: Yohimbine blocks presynaptic alpha-2 adrenergic receptors. Its action on peripheral blood vessels resembles that of reserpine, though it is weaker and of short duration. Yohimbine's peripheral autonomic nervous system effect is to increase parasympathetic (cholinergic) and decrease sympathetic (adrenergic) activity. It is to be noted that in male sexual performance, erection is linked to cholinergic activity and to alpha-2 adrenergic blockade which may theoretically result in increased penile inflow, decreased penile outflow or both.

Yohimbine exerts a stimulating action on the mood and may increase anxiety. Such actions have not been adequately studied or related to dosage although they appear to require high doses of the drug. Yohimbine has a mild anti-diuretic action, probably via stimulation of hypothalamic centers and release of posterior pituitary hormone.

Reportedly, Yohimbine exerts no significant influence on cardiac stimulation and other effects mediated by B-adrenergic receptors, its effect on blood pressure, if any, would be to lower it; however no adequate studies are at hand to quantitate this effect in terms of Yohimbine dosage.

Indications: Yocon[®] is indicated as a sympatholytic and mydriatic. It may have activity as an aphrodisiac.

Contraindications: Renal diseases, and patient's sensitive to the drug. In view of the limited and inadequate information at hand, no precise tabulation can be offered of additional contraindications.

Warning: Generally, this drug is not proposed for use in females and certainly must not be used during pregnancy. Neither is this drug proposed for use in pediatric, geriatric or cardio-renal patients with gastric or duodenal ulcer history. Nor should it be used in conjunction with mood-modifying drugs such as antidepressants, or in psychiatric patients in general.

Adverse Reactions: Yohimbine readily penetrates the (CNS) and produces a complex pattern of responses in lower doses than required to produce peripheral a-adrenergic blockade. These include, anti-diuresis, a general picture of central excitation including elevation of blood pressure and heart rate, increased motor activity, irritability and tremor. Sweating, nausea and vomiting are common after parenteral administration of the drug.^{1,2} Also dizziness, headache, skin flushing reported when used orally.^{1,3}

Dosage and Administration: Experimental dosage reported in treatment of erectile impotence.^{1,3,4} 1 tablet (5.4 mg) 3 times a day, to adult males taken orally. Occasional side effects reported with this dosage are nausea, dizziness or nervousness. In the event of side effects dosage to be reduced to 1/2 tablet 3 times a day, followed by gradual increases to 1 tablet 3 times a day. Reported therapy not more than 10 weeks.³

How Supplied: Oral tablets of Yocon[®] 1/12 gr. 5.4 mg in bottles of 100's NDC 53159-001-01 and 1000's NDC 53159-001-10.

Celiac Sprue

Diagnosis and Diet: Keys to Recovery

Stephen M. Schutz, M.D.,¹ J. Stroebel, M.D.,¹ E.M. Schutz, R.D.,² L. Leaseburge, R.D.,² and J. Baillie, M.B. Ch.B.¹

Our Division of Gastroenterology recently hosted the first meeting of a new chapter of the American Celiac Society. Patients with celiac sprue (CS) from the Triangle area (and beyond) met to share their experiences and to discuss their disease. A recurrent theme these patients raised was the feeling that they were "on their own" once the diagnosis of CS was made. Indeed, several participants reported that they had had to see a number of doctors before the diagnosis was established. And even after that they got little information about the special diet and other treatments available to help them. It struck us that a review of this disorder would be timely and would raise the level of awareness of health professionals in North Carolina regarding this debilitating, but clearly treatable disorder.

CS is a relatively uncommon but nevertheless important disease of interest to gastroenterologists and all physicians. Also called celiac disease, gluten-sensitive enteropathy, idiopathic steatorrhea, non-tropical sprue, and "celiac passion," it was for many years thought to be a disease of children until clinicians realized that a variety of adult disorders actually represented manifestations of celiac sprue, and the long list of names was shortened.

CS causes significant morbidity and even death if not recognized and treated. A high level of clinical suspicion is usually necessary to make the diagnosis. Fortunately, diagnosis is worthwhile because CS usually responds well to treatment. There are four essential features of the disorder:

- 1) It is activated by ingestion of gluten, a protein found in wheat and other grains.
- 2) There is a characteristic, but non-specific, histological lesion of small bowel mucosa.
- 3) There is malabsorption of nutrients across the damaged mucosa.
- 4) There is prompt clinical improvement following withdrawal of gluten from the diet.

History

In 1888 Samuel Gee published a landmark paper describing "the coeliac affliction" in children suffering from wasting, pallor, weakness, growth retardation, and a "doughy" abdomen. Gee noted an association with certain foods such as rice, corn flour, and other starches. He concluded, "If the patient can be cured at all it must be by means of diet." In 1932 Thaysen first described the condition in adults.

In 1953 Dicke¹ reported on the incidence of CS in the Netherlands before and during World War II. During the war, when grain products were in short supply, there was a decreased incidence of CS, and previously diagnosed patients reported improvement in their symptoms. After the war, the incidence returned to pre-war levels. Dicke suggested that cereal grains somehow harmed patients with CS. Subsequently, van de Kamer, Dicke, and others showed that the wheat protein gluten caused the small bowel mucosal damage in CS.

Epidemiology

Celiac sprue is found worldwide, but is most common in Caucasians, particularly northern Europeans.² The prevalence in Europe is 5 to 20 per 10,000 population; in western Ireland it is 33/10,000; in the United States it is less 5/10,000. The disorder is unusual in those of African and Asian descent. There is a slight excess of incidence in females.

Pathogenesis

The essential element of CS is injury of the small bowel mucosa by exposure to gluten. Gluten is a water-insoluble, high molecular weight protein found in wheat, rye, barley, and oats. There are two components of gluten, glutenin and gliadin. Glutenin is not toxic, but gliadin is. It has four subtypes, all of which damage small bowel mucosa in vitro.

The mechanism of gluten toxicity is unknown, and attempts to study the mechanism are hampered by the lack of an animal model. Circumstantial evidence suggests that the mucosal injury is immunologically mediated. Large numbers of immunologically active cells infiltrate the small bowel mucosa in active CS, and there is an increased local production of antigliadin antibodies in the mucosa after exposure to gliadin.

Genetic factors may also be involved. Susceptibility to CS is closely associated with certain major histocompatibility antigens, notably HLA-B8, DR-3, and DQ-W2. One or more of these HLA subtypes is present in 60% to 90% of CS patients compared with less than 20% of controls.

Early investigators postulated that a mucosal enzyme deficiency resulted in an accumulation of toxic gluten metabolites. In fact, patients with untreated CS do have multiple mucosal enzyme deficiencies but these are secondary to gluten-induced mucosal injury and resolve as the mucosa recovers with treatment. They are not thought to be involved in the pathogenesis of the disease.

The "viral trigger" theory is a relatively new concept advanced by Kagnoff and coworkers,³ who discovered that a subtype of human adenovirus shares a sequence of 12 amino acids with alpha-gliadin. These authors found that 89% of their celiac patients had serologic evidence of prior infection with this particular adenovirus compared to 17% of controls. They suggested that infection with the virus sensitizes genetically predisposed individuals to produce antibodies against gliadin antigens resembling those on the virus coat. According to this theory, the immune response that follows exposure to gliadin antigens then causes the small bowel mucosal injury.

Pathology

Celiac sprue is basically a mucosal lesion. The degree of mucosal involvement varies widely, generally corresponding with the level of symptoms. Except in severe cases, the small bowel is more involved proximally than distally. This explains why vitamin B12 and bile salts are absorbed normally (in the distal small bowel) until relatively late in the disease.

CS often has a patchy distribution, with some areas of the small bowel relatively spared, so it is important to select biopsy sites with care. In the past, biopsies were taken distal to the duodeno-jejunal junction using a suction biopsy device such as the Crosby capsule (Figure 1). The devices were swallowed and carried by peristalsis beyond the ligament of Treitz, where they were "fired." Capsule biopsy devices are seldom used today because the technique is time consuming, uncomfortable for the patient, requires fluoroscopy, and has a 5% to 10% failure rate. They have been replaced by flexible endoscopy, which is simple, safe, rapid, and allows direct examination of the bowel wall and precise selection of the biopsy site with virtually 100% success.⁴ This is now the preferred technique, especially since multiple biopsies can be taken from various locations in the duodenum, increasing the diagnostic yield.

The histologic diagnosis of CS depends on four findings: 1) villus shortening, 2) crypt hyperplasia, 3) transformation of the normal columnar lining cells of the mucosa, and 4) infiltration of the lamina propria with large numbers of inflammatory cells. The villi are short or even flat in CS, but the actual thickness of the mucosa is unchanged because the crypts are hypertrophied and elongated.

Normally the crypt:villus ratio is approximately 2:5; in severe CS it can approach 10:1. The columnar absorptive cells that normally line the small bowel lose their characteristic shape and become cuboidal or even squamous in appearance. Usually there is a significant increase in the number of inflammatory cells (lymphocytes, plasma cells, eosinophils, and mast cells) in the mucosa.⁵

Clinical Features

Celiac sprue is well described in adults, but it remains primarily a disease of children. There is an early peak of incidence during infancy when cereals are first introduced into the diet. Curiously, the clinical manifestations frequently remit during adolescence. They sometimes return in adulthood, usually during the third and fourth decades of life, although carefully documented cases have been reported in patients as old as 84.²

The clinical features of CS are highly variable and non-specific. At one end of the spectrum we find individuals with minimal malabsorption of nutrients who may present with iron deficiency anemia, weakness, or lethargy but no other manifestations. At the other extreme lie patients with frank steatorrhea, osteomalacia, protein deficiency, and profound weight loss. Most patients fall somewhere in the middle of the spectrum. The severity of an individual's symptoms depends largely on the severity and extent of mucosal damage since the more extensive the mucosal injury, the less the capacity for absorbing essential nutrients.

Many patients first become symptomatic as adults. This may represent primary CS or the unmasking of "latent" disease. By "latent" we refer to asymptomatic sprue, which becomes apparent only after a clinical "challenge." Thus sprue may appear in adults in response to an abrupt increase in the rate of delivery of gluten to the small bowel, such as after peptic ulcer surgery that increases the rate of gastric emptying, or after changes in diet. One remarkable case involved a member of the U.S. military sent to Saudi Arabia during Operation Desert Storm in 1991. This man developed severe malabsorption shortly after arriving in the desert and had to be sent back to the U.S. Duodenal biopsy was consistent with CS, and his symptoms resolved with a gluten-free diet. The ubiquitous military "meals-ready-to-eat" (MRE) contain unusually high levels of gluten.

Gastrointestinal Manifestations

Table 1 shows the clinical features of celiac sprue. Diarrhea is the most common symptom.² It can have several causes, all related to the underlying intestinal malabsorption that results in a markedly increased delivery of fluid and osmotically active substances to the colon. Fluid delivery is increased because injured small bowel mucosa secretes water and electrolytes into the intestinal lumen; when the distal small bowel is involved, the malabsorption of bile salts traps free water in the colon. Chronic diarrhea in turn causes dehydration, electrolyte abnormalities, and protein and fat malabsorption with their own complications. Weight loss, sometimes profound, is common and, as nutritional compromise continues, there are frequent complaints of weakness. Flatus due to fermentation of unabsorbed carbohydrates can be a significant problem,² but patients are often embarrassed to volunteer this information, which should be requested.

Other Manifestations

Anemia can be an important feature, even the first sign of the disease, especially in the elderly. Iron and folate deficiencies are well described in CS, but vitamin B12 deficiency is rare. Iron deficiency anemia in the absence of blood loss or folate deficiency in a patient without the usual risk factors should both raise the possibility of occult CS.

Malabsorption of vitamin K can cause coagulopathy with prolonged prothrombin time. An elevated platelet count can result from the impaired spleen function (hyposplenism) characteristic of advanced CS.⁶ Osteopenia, due to inadequate calcium and vitamin D absorption, predisposes to compression fractures and pain. Hypomagnesemia and hypocalcemia may be severe enough to cause tetany, muscle cramps, and ileus.

Neurologic abnormalities such as ataxia, weakness, and paresthesias have been associated with CS, but their cause remains a mystery. They are not related to vitamin B12 deficiency and usually revert after institution of a gluten-free diet. Follicular hyperkeratosis can be an early manifestation of vitamin A deficiency that can even result in night blindness if untreated.

There is a very close association between CS and dermatitis herpetiformis, an intensely pruritic, chronic papulovesicular eruption symmetrically distributed on extensor surfaces such as elbows, knees, and buttocks. More than 90% of patients with dermatitis herpetiformis have changes in the small bowel mucosa identical to those seen with CS, even when they have no sprue-like symptoms.⁷ Like CS, dermatitis herpetiformis is associated with histocompatibility antigens HLA B8 and DR 3, but most patients with CS do not develop dermatitis herpetiformis.

Laboratory Assessment

Laboratory abnormalities, like physical findings, tend to reflect the degree of intestinal malabsorption (Table 2). Antigliadin antibodies are present in the serum of more than 90% of patients with CS, but the presence of these antibodies is not a good diagnostic test for CS because they can be found in other disorders that affect the small bowel mucosa, such as Crohn's disease. Radiographic studies of the small bowel may be normal, even in severe CS, or they may demonstrate dilation of the intestinal lumen, a rapid transit time through the bowel, or obliteration of mucosal folds. "Flocculation" of barium in small bowel loops, once regarded as pathognomonic of CS, is rarely seen with modern contrast media.

The "gold standard" for diagnosis of CS is small bowel biopsy. The histological appearance on biopsy and the absorption of ingested D-xylose are normal in many of the diseases that may mimic CS by causing intraluminal maldigestion and malabsorption (e.g., pancreatic insufficiency, chronic liver disease, bacterial overgrowth). Abdominal CT scan, endoscopic retrograde cholangiopancreatography (ERCP), liver biopsy, or dynamic tests of bacterial metabolism are usually needed to confirm other diagnoses.

Diseases that do alter small bowel mucosa and cause malabsorption include tropical sprue, lymphoma, Whipple's disease, hypogammaglobulinemia, and eosinophilic gastroenteritis. These disorders cannot always be distinguished from CS histologically, but they can usually be differentiated by history, physical exam, and lack of response to a gluten-free diet.

Treatment

Patients with severe CS-related complications—dehydration, electrolyte abnormalities, vitamin deficiencies—must have these problems addressed as a first step. This is particularly important when anemia, osteomalacia, or tetany are present. Thereafter, one should move quickly to address the underlying problem of gluten intolerance.

As Samuel Gee predicted, the mainstay of treatment is a special, gluten-free diet (Table 3). Foods that contain wheat, barley, rye, and oats should be strictly avoided, which can be a challenge to patients. In addition to being a basic ingredient in breads, cereals, and pastas, gluten may be present as an additive in other, ostensibly non-gluten-containing foods such as pudding, ice cream, and ketchup. To make matters even more difficult, pharmaceutical manufacturers often use gluten as an excipient or filler in capsules or tablets. Adhering to the diet is difficult, but necessary because the most common cause of symptom relapse is dietary non-compliance. Newly diagnosed patients with CS should review their diet with a dietitian at least twice a year early in their course.

Many patients find membership in the American Celiac Society (ACS) or similar support groups to be quite helpful in maintaining compliance.

Most patients improve within two to three weeks of beginning a gluten-free diet, but some take longer. It is important to follow patients closely and monitor their progress. In general, if patients have not responded by four to six weeks after gluten withdrawal, a trial of glucocorticoids is appropriate. Only 5% of patients are refractory to dietary treatment, and they generally respond to glucocorticoids.⁸ The rare patients who fail to respond even to glucocorticoids may benefit from immunosuppressive drugs such as imuran, cytoxan, or cyclosporine.⁹

Complications

Patients with CS appear to have an increased risk of developing a malignancy, perhaps as high as 11% to 13% over a lifetime.¹⁰ CS-related malignancies usually occur in older patients who have had CS for many years. The most common malignancy is small bowel lymphoma (in one series of 235 patients with CS and a malignancy, approximately 50% had lym-phoma¹¹), but other tumors include small bowel adenocarcinoma and squamous cell carcinoma of the esophagus. It is still not clear whether a gluten-free diet alters the risk of malignancy, but at least one study suggests that it does,¹² and this is one more reason to encourage patients to pay close attention to what they eat.

A search for malignancy should be undertaken only if there is cause for suspicion. For example, patients who have done well for long periods on a gluten-free diet should be investigated if they begin to experience symptoms again. So should patients who fail initial dietary treatment and continue to lose weight or otherwise do poorly. There is no indication for routine screening of CS patients for malignancy.

An unusual but potentially devastating complication of CS is ulcerative enteritis. The resultant ulcers and strictures of the small bowel can result in perforation or obstruction, which often require surgery with a high mortality risk—up to 75% in the case of perforation. Ulcerative enteritis is the leading cause of premature death in young patients with CS.

Summary

Celiac sprue is a devastating disease that can have fatal consequences if untreated. Fortunately, if diagnosed correctly and promptly, it can be effectively treated with very satisfactory outcomes. A careful history will often suggest the diagnosis, but definitive diagnosis requires finding the typical lesion on small bowel biopsy and clinical improvement with a gluten-free diet. If symptoms and mucosal abnormalities persist, glucocorticoids should be tried. Malignancy is a rare complication of longstanding CS that should be looked for if there is no response to gluten withdrawal or if symptoms relapse despite adherence to diet. □

Screening for Lung Cancer

It Doesn't Make a Difference

Jeffrey G. Wong, M.D., and John R. Feussner, M.D.

"Mr. Jones is a 57-year-old man who has worked in the textile mills most of his life. Up until three years ago, he smoked one to two packs of cigarettes per day and had since his late teens. He quit because it seemed he had 'pneumonia all the time' and he was tired of coughing and being short of breath. He gained 20 pounds following smoking cessation, and he has mild hypertension, controlled well with medication. He has come in for his annual check-up and inquires about a chest x-ray to screen him for lung cancer."

Should we order a chest x-ray for Mr. Jones? In the first article in this series on health care screening of asymptomatic patients by primary care practitioners (NC Med J 1993;54:218-21) we addressed general considerations for deciding whether and how to screen asymptomatic patients for disease. In this article we formulate a recommendation for Mr. Jones, by applying the six guidelines provided in our first article to his question. We review each guideline in order to arrive at a reasonable therapeutic plan.

Target Disease Considerations

1. Is the disease common or serious enough to warrant screening?

Yes. Lung cancer is the most common cause of cancer-related death in this country. In 1993, there were 170,000 new cases of lung cancer and 49,000 deaths.¹ Although mortality from lung cancer is great in men, there has been an alarming increase in the incidence and mortality rate of lung cancer in women—more women now die from lung cancer than from breast cancer.¹ The incidence rates for lung cancer increase with age beginning at age 40 and peak at about age 70 to 75. Patients who die from lung cancer lose, on average, 15 years of life.²

2. Is there a presymptomatic phase in the natural history of the disease during which time a test can detect it?

Possibly yes, but... Lung cancer can be detected at an early stage by plain chest radiograms or other radiological tests (computerized tomography scans, magnetic resonance imaging scans). Cytological investigation of sputum can detect occult lung cancer—cancer that is not seen radiographically. Practically speaking, however, the discovery of "silent" lung cancer by any method is usually serendipitous, occurring during the investigation of a patient's non-specific complaints (cough, fatigue, weight loss, etc.). In addition, the poor accuracy of all tests (see section on test characteristics) adversely affects this screening criterion.

3. Are there effective treatments for the disease available to use after early detection?

In few instances, yes. For therapeutic reasons, lung cancer is grouped into two categories: small cell lung cancer (formerly called oat-cell), and non-small cell lung cancer (squamous cell carcinoma, adenocarcinoma, large cell carcinoma, and anaplastic carcinoma). Establishing the histological cell type is important in selecting appropriate treatment, but detecting the cancer at a limited stage is critical for survival.

Advanced stage non-small cell cancer (Stage III or IV) has a dismal prognosis. Overall, less than 13% of all non-small cell lung cancer patients survive more than the five years.³ However, patients with very limited stage non-small cell lung cancer (Stage I—small tumor, no regional lymph node involvement), may have five-year survival rates as high as 70% following surgical resection.⁴ Surgical resection of Stage II disease (small tumor with localized peribronchial or ipsilateral lymph nodes only) gives only modest improvement over baseline survival.³ Nevertheless, surgery is the only treatment that produces any improvement in mortality for limited non-small cell lung cancer. The presence of occult metastases in apparently "limited" disease accounts for lack of complete cure. Radiation therapy and cytotoxic chemotherapy have little effect on survival regardless of clinical stage and are considered palliative therapies.

Small cell lung cancer represents about 20% to 25% of all cases of lung cancer. It has a very poor prognosis. Untreated, patients with small cell lung cancer live on average less than nine months. Almost all have extrathoracic metastases (Stage IV disease) at presentation although the degree of tumor burden varies from patient to patient. In most instances, there is an initial favorable response to treatment with cytotoxic chemotherapy or radiation therapy or both. Following remission, the cancer usually relapses and even in the best cases, the two-year survival rate following treatment is less than 25%.⁵

Screening Test Considerations

1. Are there screening tests with acceptable sensitivity and specificity available to detect the target disease?

Probably not. Clinicians use two main strategies to screen for lung cancer: the plain chest radiograph and cytological evaluation of sputum. With both there are significant problems in performance of the test and in interpretation of the results. These problems undermine the overall accuracy and diminish the usefulness of the tests.

The screening chest radiograph has three main problems in detecting lung cancer. First, important performance variables, including the amount of exposure, radiographic technique, patient position, and cooperation must be controlled in order to get a "good film." Secondly, once obtained, there are inherent difficulties in interpreting the radiograph. A lesion considered suspicious for cancer by one radiologist may not be so interpreted by another—in fact, significant disagreement occurs often.⁶ Thirdly, even lesions that, by consensus, have a radiographic appearance of lung cancer can never be diagnosed with certainty without the "gold standard" of tissue biopsy.

Similarly, the use of sputum cytology is limited by difficulties of obtaining adequate sputum samples to study, the problems of cytopathological interpretation, and the ultimate need for "gold standard" comparison between cytology and tissue pathology.

Acknowledging the inherent problems, it is clear that determining sensitivity and specificity of screening tests for lung cancer is very difficult. Mathematical models give an estimated sensitivity of chest x-ray in discovering Stage I tumors at around 16%.⁷ Values for specificity have not even been estimated.

Few studies have looked at the effectiveness of these tests in screening average risk populations; randomized trials have targeted high-risk populations for their study cohorts. Case control studies in Germany⁸ and Japan⁹ utilized patients in tuberculosis screening programs. There was no reduction of mortality in the case population in the German study; the Japanese study did show a trend for improved survival in the screened population at one year of follow-up ($p = 0.07$).

In 1971, randomized studies performed under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute were initiated at Johns Hopkins Hospital,¹⁰ at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Hospital,¹¹ and at the Mayo Clinic.¹² All three trials studied middle-aged to older male smokers.

At Memorial Sloan-Kettering, the study subjects ($n=10,000$) were randomized into a screened population who had yearly chest x-rays and sputum cytology every four months and a "control group" who only had yearly chest x-rays. The trial at Johns Hopkins was identically designed and had a total of 10,400 participants. In both of these trials, the volunteers were followed for six years and there were no differences in the survival rates between the screened and control populations.

The Mayo Clinic trial had a different design but similar results. Volunteers ($n=10,900$) all had an initial chest radiograph and sputum cytological evaluation. All subjects who did not have cancer and were otherwise suitable were then randomized into a screened population that received chest radiographs and sputum cytological tests every four months for six years or into a control population whose members were advised at the beginning of the study to get yearly chest x-rays and sputum cytological tests, but this advice was not repeated. About 50% of the control group got chest x-rays. More cancers were discovered in the screened group; there were more deaths due to cancer in the screened population; and there was no significant difference in mortality rates between the two groups.

In Czechoslovakia,¹³ 6,364 male smokers were initially evaluated with chest radiographs and sputum cytology and those with cancer ($n=19$) were excluded from the analysis. The remaining 6,345 subjects were randomized into screened and control groups. The screened group received chest x-rays and sputum cytology every six months for three years; the control group received no studies unless they developed symptoms. Cancers discovered during the three-year duration of the study were labeled "screen-detected" cases. After three years, both groups received yearly chest radiographs, and any cancers discovered during this time were labeled "interval" cases. More lung cancers were diagnosed in the screened group. "Screen-detected" cases had a five-year survival rate of 25% compared to the corresponding "interval" case five-year survival rate of 8.2% ($p<0.001$). However, during the entire study period, there was no differences in survival rates. Screening detected cancers earlier and before symptoms appeared, but this did not improve survival (lead-time bias).

In summary, several trials have demonstrated that intensive screening (chest x-ray every four to six months) is no better than occasional or annual screening and that sputum cytological evaluation adds no screening benefit. Some experts believe that asymptomatic, high-risk individuals should be screened,¹⁴ but the available data do not support this position.

2. Can an appropriate population of high-risk patients be identified to undergo screening?

Yes. A number of risk factors for lung cancer have been identified but none are more important than cigarette smoking. The risk of lung cancer dramatically increases with the number of cigarettes and the number of years smoked.¹⁵ The risk of lung cancer is higher in men than in women but that difference is narrowing, probably due to the increased amount of smoking by women. Several occupational and environmental factors also increase lung cancer risk: asbestos,¹⁶ radon gas (found in mines), and several environmental agents (chromate, nickel, polyhydrocarbons, and alkylating compounds).¹⁷

3. Do the benefits of screening justify the costs of the screening strategy?

Probably not. Since we have no estimates of screening test sensitivity and specificity, any cost-benefit analysis is extremely difficult. There certainly are no data to support the screening of populations at average risk, and the studies performed in high-risk populations have shown no improvement in mortality rates with screening. Since the benefits of screening are so few (if any), the costs (for evaluation of false-positive tests) associated with overdiagnosis in the high-risk populations take on greater importance in policy decisions.¹⁸

Recommendations

Virtually all organizations (American Cancer Society, National Cancer Institute, U.S. Preventive Services Task Force, American College of Physicians, and the Canadian Task Force) concur that screening for lung cancer is not justified. These conclusions are based on available evidence demonstrating that there is no benefit for screening. It appears that our ability to detect lung cancer, whether symptomatic or asymptomatic, does not appreciably change the natural history of the disease. Not surprisingly, experts have focused on preventing lung cancer occurrence by altering the greatest risk factor in our society, cigarette smoking. We would recommend that Mr. Jones not smoke, but not recommend that he get a chest x-ray. □

Next in our series on screening strategies for disease, we will discuss the following:

Mr. Jones has listened to your explanation about the lack of benefit of a chest x-ray for him. He states that he will continue to abstain from cigarettes and is interested in improving his overall health. He is worried that his uncle, also a cigarette smoker, died of "mouth cancer." Mr. Jones wonders if there are any tests that can assure him that he isn't developing mouth cancer.

What should we tell him?

Doctors vs. Lawyers

A Robert Burns Analysis

Erle E. Peacock, Jr., M.D., J.D.

"Oh wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursels as others see us!
It wad frae monie a blunder free us,
An' foolish notion."

—Robert Burns, To a Louse (1786), st. 8

I am a life member of the North Carolina Medical Society. I recently read for the second time Tracy Lischer's presentation in the North Carolina Medical Journal of what she perceives to be myths that divide the medical and legal professions.¹ The editor tells me he hoped that publication of Ms. Lischer's ideas would be the beginning of a better understanding between doctors and lawyers. That hope may or may not have been realized depending on one's point of view or definition of "understanding." The reaction of most physicians was, I suspect, the same as my own and that of the several correspondents whose letters the Journal subsequently published, namely, that all we really achieved was a better understanding of the worst kind of misunderstanding. The nature of the misunderstanding became more clear in Ms. Lischer's response² to the correspondents' letters than it was in the original article, although there it was clear enough.

I am also a member of the North Carolina Bar Association and a practicing attorney in the field of malpractice defense. On the same day that I reviewed Ms. Lischer's article and letters to the editor, I experienced an equally clear demonstration of why attorneys see physicians as arrogant and unapproachable. I had detected what appeared to be an error in the report of an autopsy performed by the State Medical Examiner's office. I called the prosecutor at home and asked if I could see him to discuss my finding. He instructed me to call his office the next day because he did not know his schedule. The next day I went directly to the Medical Examiner's office because, in any case, I wanted to examine the records. I encountered the pathologist in the hall and introduced myself. The introduction was followed by an expression of displeasure that I had not called before making an appearance; he then announced that if I wanted to talk to him, it would cost me $150 an hour. Instead I examined the records alone, then asked to speak to the Associate Medical Examiner. His receptionist relayed to me the message that I could only speak with the good doctor by appointment and that he also charged $150 an hour, even to speak to another physician.

Several days later, I discussed the matter with the Chief Medical Examiner who went over the case with me, answered my questions, and excused his subordinates' actions by saying that they must not have understood my request. I agree that they did not understand what I wanted—but apparently they did not understand because they simply would not listen.

Attorneys tend to generalize about physicians in the same way that physicians generalize about lawyers. Lawyers feel that doctors often are arrogant, sometimes pompous, and much of the time simply won't listen! Even though I know better, my reaction to a State employee in a State office about a public document generated by a member of a medical specialty customarily having the last word, led me—at least at first—to characterize my medical colleagues the same way my attorney colleagues categorize them. In one day, I saw, I heard, and I experienced all I needed to realize that the division between lawyers and doctors is real and that feelings run deep on both sides.

Points to Ponder

I agree that clarifying positions is an important first step to understanding, even when it means we must clearly illuminate the worst problems causing division. Because of my many years as a physician and now as an attorney in a firm specializing in defense of health care providers, I have access to various points of view and some first-hand observations that may help analyze the reasons for the gulf between the two professions. In fact, my dual careers have given me a more fervent desire to reduce misunderstanding and promote cooperative effort between lawyers and doctors than most members of the professions. I am pleased, therefore, to offer comments that I presented to the Durham-Orange County Medical Society at its October 1993 meeting:

1. Do doctors and lawyers appreciate the division between them equally? My answer is no! In my experience, most lawyers do not despise doctors in the same way that most physicians distrust, and, in some instances, actually despise attorneys. It is true that lawyers are commonly jealous about the income that physicians enjoy. And I have found lawyers irritated and frustrated by trying to work with physicians, but I have not encountered the universal condemnation of a profession by lawyers that I frequently hear from doctors. Basically, there are two reasons for this. Probably the most obvious is that lawyers hold a power over physicians that is not reciprocated. You simply do not feel comfortable when another profession holds power over you, and sometimes exercises that power in a way that seems frivolous or greedy. And, although good lawyers are not guilty of abusing the legal process, some not-so-good lawyers do and they inflict pain and damage to brand the profession in the eyes of victims and their sympathizers.

2. The two professions analyze and solve problems in different ways. Although the differences are significant, it is in this area that I believe we have the best opportunity to achieve better understanding. For instance, we could ask how each profession seeks truth. Through the ages the medical profession has learned to rely on the scientific method and to hold learned authority in high regard or respect. The legal profession, in marked contrast, often has little understanding of the scientific method and has virtually no respect for authority. Lawyers search for truth through analytic and synthetic logic; they are trained intensely to find and present truth as a by-product of rational thought and reason. The ultimate criterion of truth for physicians is the reproducibility of observations upon testing and use. The ultimate test of truth for lawyers is that a jury is persuaded by presentation of evidence.

There is a vast difference between these two approaches in the search for truth, and some of the division between law and medicine would be reduced if each understood how "truth" is found and presented by the other. Neither is necessarily right; neither is necessarily wrong, but there surely are differences in the fundamental intellectual processes by which the two professions proceed.

3. Lawyers and doctors differ because of their respective ignorance about specialized fields of knowledge: the Rules of Evidence in law and the Calculation of Risk in medicine. I have found that the ignorance of each profession regarding the requirements of the other in these areas is very destructive. Doctors simply do not understand how and why the Rules of Evidence are critical to the legal resolution of disputes, and lawyers seldom understand or appreciate the comparative risks involved in managing human ailments. In my judgment, significant distrust between the two professions often results from ignorance about these basic principles. Some lawyers seem to live in a world governed by the ethereal specter of the "reasonable, prudent person" who foresees (or ought to have foreseen) every possible consequence of every possible action. Doctors cannot and do not live by this standard and they resent being held liable for not doing so. For their part, doctors seem to live as though their world is (or ought to be) above the law, as though the rules for settling disputes that have evolved over centuries from the best legal minds of the English-speaking world simply should not apply to them. Neither of these states of ignorance is helpful and only a more sympathetic understanding by the professions of how each other works and thinks can begin to improve things.

Why Doctors Need Lawyers

Let us look for a moment at the question of whether there is any real need to reduce the division between the legal and medical professions. If I were asked to give an answer on behalf of the medical profession, I would say emphatically, "Yes!" In fact, that is why I wanted to study law. In my judgment, physicians of the future are going to have to work more closely with lawyers than ever before. And medical malpractice is only the tip of the iceberg. With every governmental reform in health care delivery, there will be more checking (often by lay people) for "quality assurance" (as perceived by lay people). More and more, physicians are going to be working for and at the direction of non-physicians because this previous violation of common law has been strikingly reversed through establishment of HMO statutes, etc. Doctors are not organized and do not have the legal power of collective bargaining that is available to other similarly treated groups. The result, already painfully obvious, can be frank denial of constitutionally protected rights for every American citizen, regardless of occupation.

Even more dangerous, in my opinion, is what physicians are doing to each other. An oversupply of physicians, particularly of highly compensated specialists, has brought about ugly, economically motivated attempts to eliminate competition. Peer review (and the only partially correct perception that peer reviewers have legal immunity for their actions) provides a method of discouraging or eliminating competition, in direct violation of the Clayton and Sherman Anti-Trust Acts. Physicians need more than just help with malpractice defense; they need a different kind of legal help to defend themselves in these new areas.

Of course, doctors will still need help in the malpractice arena. No hope is more misplaced, in my judgment, than the fervent faith that tort reform will solve the abuse of medical malpractice litigation. Significant tort reform is probably not going to happen for a number of reasons, including the fact that compensation caps, the very heart of tort reform, will certainly face state and national constitutional challenge. The U.S. Supreme Court has not ruled on this question but nine state courts have been divided in their decisions.³ In Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, North Dakota, and Texas, compensation caps have been struck down; in Nebraska, the Supreme Court divided evenly on the issue which let the cap remain in place; in three states, Indiana, Louisiana, and Virginia, caps have been upheld.

There are many other facets of physician-lawyer relations that cry for improvement. For example, the problem of AIDS has shown that, in some cases, a lawyer can do more for the patient than a doctor can—if the lawyer has cooperation from a doctor in doing so. What else can we expect when any procedure or treatment can require legal interpretation and, thus, become a “federal case?”

Another example involves the problems of contract law. Every day, unsuspecting and relatively naive physicians sign contracts with HMOs, PPOs, insurance companies, or hospitals. These contracts are drawn up by superb lawyers who protect with zeal the needs of the institutions that hired them. But such contracts are often formed at the expense of, even the outright oppression of, participating physicians. Doctors simply need to work more closely and more cooperatively with lawyers, first for the good of our patients, secondly for ourselves, and finally for the good of our country during its coming struggle to provide universal health care without breaking the law or the bank. □

Law and Medicine

Separate Domains, Separate Dominions

Francis A. Neelon, Editor

I have had quite an education from our long and arduous correspondence by and about lawyers and doctors. Readers have called me and we have published a number of letters and responses to letters. Now I would like to comment.

I had no idea what repercussions would follow our naive and innocent publication of an advertisement from a law firm soliciting referrals of individuals who had been injured and sought compensation (NC Med J 1992;53:211). We might have anticipated the Vesuvius of indignation and wrath that erupted—but we did not, and the editor's learning curve was expanded as a result. Tracy Lischer, a Durham attorney, read the initial letters and was appalled at the vehemence of doctors' responses; at my request she wrote a little piece reflecting her views on why relationships between doctors and lawyers are so adversarial and acrimonious and why this is bad (NC Med J 1993;54:352-4). The response to her article was incendiary and, as her letter in this issue (see page 5) confirms, she feels battered and vilified, but not heard. After all, from her perspective she was upholding the American way: the right, the legal and constitutional right, of for anyone who has been injured, or who believes himself or herself to have been injured, to seek redress through the courts. Since lawyers honor and serve this constitutionally guaranteed process, should doctors not better understand and appreciate what lawyers do?

Of course, the psychology of this whole business is vastly more complex and less Olympian than that. But lawyers (God help me for saying this) do have points to make, and doctors need to listen to them as Erle Peacock (M.D. and now, after a long and successful career as professor of surgery at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, the University of Arizona, and Tulane University, J.D.) points out in his article adjacent.

I must say that the crux of the seemingly irresolvable antipathy arises from the vastly different world-views of doctors and lawyers. Doctors see themselves as living in a world of pragmatic reality, their job as making decisions based on nebulous probabilities. The doctors' world has no certitude, only varying degrees of likelihood. And no matter which decision doctor and patient make, if things turn out badly, the same patient (accompanied by a lawyer who was not around when the going got tough) can claim that any other decision would have been a better one—and they can find some doctor, somewhere, to agree. Doctors feel that this is unfair and often, but not always, it is.

Lawyers, on the other hand, live in quite a different world—a thought-world of logical argument, of hypothetical explanations and, eventually, of absolute decisions. When judge and jury finally rule, their decision determines the way things were. One is guilty or not, not 51% guilty and 49% innocent. After the verdict the doctor's shades of gray become the lawyer's black or white. From the doctor's perspective, lawyers live in a virtual reality, a world of how things ought to have been. They hold doctors to a standard of perfection in thought and action that surpasses human capacity and endurance. Lawyers need to get some lived experience in the reality of clinical decisions so that they might appreciate and sympathize with what doctors have known from the beginning: that “experience is treacherous, decision difficult.” □

Sowing the Seeds of Primary Care Medicine

Craig H. Steffee, M.D.

Given our increasingly urgent need for physicians who can provide comprehensive primary care, undergraduate medical education must take steps to foster interest in general internal medicine, family practice, and general pediatrics. One commonly used method is to provide an experience in community medicine, often in the form of a four-week rotation in the final year of medical school—after the student has already made a solid choice of a career path. Occasionally the primary care experience occurs early in medical education (even in the first year), when it can profoundly influence the subsequent years of training and encourage a primary care career path in many cases. Early primary care experiences do not, it seems to me, so much recruit future practitioners, as they enrich the learning process for all students; they remind frustrated preclinical students that the practice of medicine is a patient-centered activity and they enhance subsequent basic science and clinical learning by providing a context of real clinical experience.

Students' selection of clinical specialties is dramatically influenced by their clinical experiences in the chosen discipline.¹⁻³ Rabinowitz⁴ and others have documented that more students enter family medicine residencies if they have had required experience in family medicine. Cauthen et al⁵ found a sharp drop (from 36% to 9% of students) in interest in family medicine as a career between the end of the second year and the end of the third year of medical school. They attributed the decline in interest, in part, to a lack of direct exposure to primary care during the third-year curriculum.

Furthermore, some investigators^{4,6} have observed a direct relationship between the year in which students undertake their primary care experience and the year in which they finalize their decision to enter primary care. It is characteristic of many medical schools nationwide that first-year students are initially enthusiastic about primary care, but subsequently "defect" to subspecialties. This pattern suggests a need to capitalize on the period of intense interest by providing an early comprehensive care preceptorship.⁷

Early Clinical Experiences

As a student at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine, I enrolled in the problem-based curriculum track (Parallel Curriculum). In the spring of my first year I spent eight weeks at the general internal medicine practice of Randy Long, M.D., in Lexington, North Carolina. This was not only an opportunity to observe, but also a daily challenge to apply my nascent history taking, physical examination, and clinical reasoning skills. I interviewed and examined clinic patients and wrote up the history and physical examination findings on those admitted to Lexington Memorial Hospital. In my case this early clinical experience did not deflect me from my prematriculation career choice of pathology, but it did expand my interest in comprehensive care issues and provided a foundation for my remaining basic science studies.

Students' humanitarian motives, perceptions of medicine as a patient-oriented profession, and self confidence in treating patients all decline during medical school.⁸ Early clinical experiences can help to forestall the cynicism that grows during the process of medical education. They can also help to preserve in medical students the empathy, optimism, and self-confidence that are such valued attributes of comprehensive primary care providers.

I found it highly motivating, as an aspiring physician, to speak with and examine ill individuals, to participate in the evaluation of the illness, to see treatment initiated and to be present for the follow-up visit when symptoms had abated or improved. I did not see such continuity of care in the teaching centers where I and other medical students spend most of our clinical training, yet it is the basis of effective primary care and the

Direct contact with patients in a physician office environment is crucial to the effectiveness of early primary care experiences; lectures about the cognitive aspects of the discipline, even when given by primary care practitioners, are insufficient alternatives.⁹ Bruhn and Naughton¹⁰ found that, whereas clinical case presentations are indeed useful to first-year students, the students themselves viewed such maneuvers as a "frustrating substitute" for an actual patient. The authors described a clinically oriented first-year medicine course that consisted of bedside rounds in small groups (60% of class time) correlated with didactic basic science sessions. Students judged bedside rounds to be the most effective teaching method in the course, and they responded to their early clinical exposure by showing an increased interest in common diseases and diagnostic challenges (as opposed to unusual diseases and therapeutic challenges). For students, the benefit of integrating basic science with clinical experience is clear, and the mere exposure to patients attracts preclinical students to study the disease processes that are most frequently encountered in primary care.

I find it disappointing that students, confined to tertiary care centers for the greater part of their clinical years, see so few cases of the disorders that, in the absence of complications or concomitant illness, are treated in community hospitals or as outpatients. To the first- or second-year medical student, meeting a patient who has community-acquired pneumonia provides exactly the incentive to stimulate dedicated study of the microbiological and pharmacologic issues presented by common infections. Such a patient usually has a clinical history and physical findings that tremendously expand the experience base and reinforce the confidence of novice examiners.

In my own early community rotation, I saw patients with empyema, chronic active hepatitis, diverticulitis, disseminated gonococcal infection, acute myocardial infarction, delirium tremens, hepatic encephalopathy, pernicious anemia, and newly diagnosed ulcerative colitis. I remember the details of their presentations and their clinical courses vividly. As I revisited the basic science issues relevant to these disease processes during the second year of medical school, my reading was firmly anchored by the clinical correlation I drew from my own experiences.

Beyond Basic Science

Students who are immersed in the didactic sea of facts that we call "basic science" (and designate as a prelude to clinical medicine) may not fully realize that a patient does not walk into the physician's office carrying a multiple-choice list of potential diagnoses and therapeutic options. Primary care experiences introduce students to the uncertainty of clinical diagnosis and therapeutics, to the balancing of costs and benefits, and to the logistical obstacles that many patients face in obtaining health care. Patients with hypertension, for example, clearly illustrate these points by virtue of the sheer variety of pharmacologic and non-pharmacologic therapies that can be employed.

As physicians, we must encourage medical schools as they explore innovative ways to introduce early comprehensive care experiences into their curricula. These may be half-day visits in the immediate community or extended preceptorships in remote locales. I call upon community practitioners to contact our medical schools and find out how they can participate in community-based student teaching.

The primary care preceptor benefits, too, in ways that go beyond the satisfaction of teaching and the continuing education stimulated by student questions. Recruiting future physicians to rural and underserved areas is facilitated by the flux of students to the practice site and, furthermore, patients hold their doctors in higher esteem when they perceive him or her as a mentor.

In the present climate of health care introspection and reform, early community experiences may help to answer the call of the American Association of Medical Colleges and of the Clinton Administration for a new emphasis on comprehensive primary care. But regardless of whether these experiences will blossom into greater numbers of students entering primary care, they will introduce a new synergy between basic science and clinical learning and will refresh the altruistic motives that most students bring to their medical training. We will be cultivating better health care providers. □

Breast-Conservation Treatment

AT LEAST ONE-THIRD OF ALL BREAST CANCER PATIENTS COULD HAVE LUMPECTOMY FOLLOWED BY RADIATION THERAPY

The American Cancer Society, the American College of Surgeons and the American College of Radiology have agreed that women whose early breast cancer was detected by mammography are candidates for breast-saving treatment. According to new standards, women with small lumps, those with tumors as large as two inches, and even some women with positive nodes may be candidates for this treatment.

Stage for stage, patients treated in this manner have the same longevity and the same freedom from local recurrence as those treated with mastectomy.

For copies of the standards please contact Keri Sperry, American College of Radiology, 1891 Preston White Drive, Reston, VA 22091.

Reviewed by Edward C. Halperin, M.D., Book Review Editor

I take full blame for the book review column of the North Carolina Medical Journal. I proposed publishing book reviews to the former editor, Dr. Eugene Stead, a few years ago. He gave me the go-ahead and I was off. The concept, initially, seemed simple. I would pick the books for review, cajole the medical publishing houses to let me have free "review copies," and then distribute the titles for evaluation. For the most part, that is how it has worked.

I fully expected to end up on mailing lists for the commercial medical publishing houses. I envisioned myself happily requesting $150 elegantly bound tomes from Saunders, Lippincott, Raven, and McGraw-Hill. For the most part, things haven't worked out that way. A few of the publishing houses do provide me with regular notification of their new volumes. Some even cheerfully provide me with free review copies. Some have politely told me to go jump in the lake when I have asked for review copies. Most have ignored me.

Something I hadn't banked on was the deluge of unsolicited books. It seems that every month brings with it another paperback or small, hard-bound volume from some publishing house. Some of the books are accompanied by glossy "press packets," breezily informing me of the crucial information and deathless prose to be found in the touted volume. "Book Review Editor!" the press releases often cry, "Don't miss this little gem!" When four unsolicited new books piled up on my desk, and didn't seem to be going anywhere else voluntarily, it was clearly time to take action. They all got packed off into the minivan along with one spouse, three children, eight bathing suits, and a few stuffed animals for a trip to the beach. Everybody returned in relaxed and fine condition. I got through the books. My oldest daughter lost one of her bathing suits. (I am always amazed how children seem to be able to manage to lose clothes. This is a talent that we seem to lose as adults. How can you lose a garment that you spend most of the day wearing? Is it not like an umbrella or pen that you always seem to be putting down some place and forgetting. But this is a subject for another day.)

The stand-out of the lot is Dr. Olson Huff's book. Dr. Huff is a pediatrician from Black Mountain, North Carolina. He and his publishing house certainly did a good job of attempting to scare me off before I began the book. Nothing strikes fear in the heart of a medical journal book review editor like a title that the company bills as "inspirational," i.e., appropriate for religious bookstores. I don't scare easily, however, so I plunged in.

Dr. Huff has provided his readers with 134 pages of pleasant short stories. Each recounts a scene from the life of the pediatrician: a discussion with a parent, a late night in the emergency room, and a series of conversations with a child. Some of the stories give you that "God is in heaven and all is right with the world" feeling that qualifies the book as "inspirational;" some of the stories are heart-warming in the James Herriott vein; and some are poignant. Dr. Huff's book is a light, easy, and pleasant read. This would make a good "gift book" for a medical student contemplating a career in Pediatrics, a Pediatric house officer in need of uplifting, or your favorite pediatrician.

Dr. Billy Andrews' book, Ideals and Inspiration, has been served up by Vantage Press. Readers of this column have encountered this publisher before—a so-called “vanity press.” Vantage runs advertisements in magazines. I am sure you have seen them: “Authors, in search of a publisher?” They invite you to send your manuscript in and will, for a fee, publish and distribute your book. People in the commercial publishing business turn their nose up at vanity publishers. They will be quick to point out that books published by vanity press “haven’t cut it” with editors in the for-profit sector. I am sure this is, to some extent true; although the criticism is a bit self-serving.

Dr. Andrews is a pediatrician at the University of Louisville. He received his undergraduate degree from Wake Forest and his medical degree from Duke. Ideals and Inspiration is a collection of his poetry. The poems begin with boyhood poems written to honor mother, flowers, and the wonders of nature. Dr. Andrews’ mother, it appears, faithfully saved her son’s first efforts at poetry. Now, many years later, he has chosen to publish them. The poems of Dr. Andrews’ adult life deal with problems of medicine, faith, and life. There are also some poems written in homage to professional colleagues and friends.

Dr. Andrews is a devotee of the rhyming couplet. He seems to find rhymes in the most extraordinary places. Consider, for example, a selection from his poem, “To My Departed Friend, Virginia Apgar.” Dr. Apgar is memorialized, of course, in the “Apgar score” given to newborns at one and five minutes of life:

To teach us how to make others breathe
Was a great legacy for you to leave,

And, also to enlighten us with the Apgar score
For selection of the newborn who needs us more.

You were the champion of each infant with a birth defect,
The leader the national foundation did so wisely select,

To establish in many locations a birth-defect center
Where each needy infant and child could enter.

Most of my knowledge of poetry comes from those anthologies that students are obligated to plow through in high school and college. I don’t claim to be any great judge of poems. Frankly, most of the poetry that appears in The New Yorker, The Atlantic, and The New York Review of Books mystifies me. I am willing to say about poetry, as I feel about modern art, that I know what I like and I don’t like. I wish Dr. Andrews well with his avocation of poetry. As a poet, in my humble opinion, I think he is a good pediatrician.

Mr. Stacey and Dr. Ripoll’s books are the start, I suppose, of a trend. Now that health care reform is on everyone’s political agenda, the publishing industry will respond by providing us with book after book containing prescriptions for reform. There is so much available in medical periodicals and in the popular press, both of hard data and opinion concerning health care reform, that neither of these two opinionated books engaged my attention for long. □

Rous, Stephen M. The Prostate Book: Sound Advice on Symptoms and Treatment. W.W. Norton & Co., 1992, $22.95, ISBN O-393-02592-6.

Reviewed by Raymond E. Joyner, M.D., Durham Urology Associates, Durham.

The Prostate Book is an improved edition of a title originally published in 1988. Rous provides his readers with a thorough review of the anatomy and physiology of the prostate gland. The text has been updated with a new final chapter that addresses the problem of prostate cancer including diagnosis and treatment. Although the text is directed primarily at lay persons, the prose is appropriate only for fairly sophisticated readers. In my view the text provides a bit too much information and will overwhelm a large segment of the patient population. At more than 200 pages long, not including the glossary, there is probably more detail to be found in The Prostate Book than most patients are seeking.

Nonetheless, Dr. Rous’ book is well-written and contains extensive information about the prostate. The chapter concerning prostate cancer, in particular, addresses the current clinical dilemma of dealing with prostate-specific antigens (PSA) and discusses prostate cancer treatment choices. In fact, the chapter might be appropriate for non-specialist physicians seeking a reasonable review concerning PSAs and prostate cancer.

The Prostate Book provides an in-depth discussion of problems related to the prostate gland. It has become available at a time when the prostate seems to be the subject of a great deal of public concern and discussion. The book will serve as a fine resource for educated lay persons and many physicians interested in the topic, and it will be suitable for the occasional patient who has extensive questions and a desire to study the prostate in depth. The text, however, is not suitable as general waiting room literature. □

Lucente, F.E. Sobol, S.M. Essentials of Otolaryngology. Raven Press, $27.50, ISBN O-88167-369-2.

Reviewed by Harold C. Pillsbury, M.D., Professor and Chief, Otolaryngology, Head and Neck Surgery, UNC-Chapel Hill.

Essentials of Otolaryngology is an outstanding introduction to otolaryngology for medical students. It is superbly written, with a broad scope of descriptive cases, as well as useful tables and diagnostic gems. The writing is clear and concise. Each chapter includes references appropriate for further study. I highly recommend this text for all medical students who are rotating on the otolaryngology service. □

Random Thoughts on Money, Prosperity, and Judges

When a fellow says it hain't the money but the principle o' the thing, it th' money. —Kin Hubbard

Money can be translated into the beauty of living, a support of misfortune, an education, or future security. It also can be translated into a source of bitterness. —Sylvia Porter

There is an old time toast which is golden for its beauty. "When you ascend the hill of prosperity may you not meet a friend." —Mark Twain

Prosperity is the surest breeder of insolence I know. —Mark Twain

There is no such thing as justice—in or out of court. —Clarence Darrow

We must remember that we have to make judges out of men, and that by being made judges their prejudices are not diminished and their intelligence is not increased. —Robert G. Ingersoll

Judge—a law student who marks his own examination papers. —H.L. Mencken

Judging from the main portions of the history of the world, so far justice is always in jeopardy. —Walt Whitman

Our judges have been, on the whole, both able and upright public servants.... But their whole training and the aloofness of their position on the bench prevent their having, as a rule, any real knowledge of, or understanding sympathy with, the lives and needs of the ordinary hard-working toiler. —Theodore Roosevelt

We've been defending doctors since these were the state of the art.

Turn of the century
trephine for cranial surgery and tonsillotome for removing tonsils.

These instruments were the best available at the turn of the century. So was our professional liability coverage for doctors. In fact, we pioneered the concept of professional protection in 1899 and have been providing this important service exclusively to doctors ever since.

You can be sure we'll always offer the most complete professional liability coverage you can carry. Plus the personal attention and claims prevention assistance you deserve. For more information about Medical Protective coverage, contact your Medical Protective Company general agent.

“The peace of mind I get from CompuSystems is the best testimonial I can give.”

Computer systems to fit your needs

“I first read an ad for CompuSystems on the back of this same journal. At the time, I had an older computer system that just wasn’t meeting my needs. Then I learned that a change in the system to allow electronic filing would be quite expensive without really improving it.

Software that inspires confidence

and collections in my office. The age of my receivables has been dramatically reduced. I can design my own reports to extract almost any information from the system. Most of all, I’m confident that the business side of my practice is under control.”

Gaining peace of mind

“The peace of mind I get from CompuSystems is the best testimonial I can give. It’s an investment that allows me to focus on practicing medicine, instead of on the business of medicine.

“If you’d like to hear more, please feel free to call me or drop by.”

- More physicians in North and South Carolina choose CompuSystems’ Medical Insurance Processing and Billing System than any other.
- Electronic filing directly to North Carolina Medicare, Medicaid, and BC/BS with no per-claim charges.
- Features to maximize return, improve cash flow, and increase productivity.
- “One-call” total system support, including on-site hardware service.

Turn of the century trephine for cranial surgery and tonsillotome for removing tonsils.

These instruments were the best available at the turn of the century. So was our professional liability coverage for doctors. In fact, we pioneered the concept of professional protection in 1899 and have been providing this important service exclusively to doctors ever since.

You can be sure we'll always offer the most complete professional liability coverage you can carry. Plus the personal attention and claims prevention assistance you deserve. For more information about Medical Protective coverage, contact your Medical Protective Company general agent.

Letters to the Editor

December NCMJ: Thoughts on Dr. Stead's Article and More To the Editor:

I thank Dr. Stead for his article in the December Journal (NC Med J 1993;54:645-50) in which he expressed his insight about teaching. I hope that others will absorb his philosophy. Unfortunately, my teaching days are long gone, but certainly not forgotten.

I hope that my residents absorbed some of my thoughts but I know they were inferior to Dr. Stead's. Surely I learned more from his article, as I always learned more from my residents than was conveyed to them.

Everett I. Bugg, Jr., MD

To the Editor:

I was so moved by Dr. Stead's Lecocq Lecture (NC Med J 1993;54:645-50) that I felt compelled to send the article to all of our orthopaedic staff from the bottom up. I thank Dr. Stead for guiding me more than 30 years ago. How vividly I remember those precious moments of learning.

James R. Urbaniak, MD

To the Editor:

I have read Dr. Stead's "four talks" as recorded in the Journal (NC Med J 1993;54:645-50). I think it's only fitting that I tell him what I have intended for some time. As he was 40 years ago, he remains a great inspiration in my personal as well as professional life. Early on I aspired to become wise, as I perceived him to be. Even though I have fallen short of my aspirations, I did not suffer from lack of direction from him.

This is not meant to be maudlin, but rather, an expression of my admiration for Dr. Stead and appreciation for the opportunity to have shared his wisdom.

To the Editor:

I enjoyed Dr. Stead's piece (NC Med J 1993;54:645-50). There is much wisdom about education in it that will go completely unobserved by the institution he served so well—not to mention all other medical schools.

But, unless I am mistaken, Dr. Greenfield didn't get the message clearly either. In his commentary (NC Med J 1993;54:650) he points out that it is important for doctors to become confident—and cites this as a reason for not doing the "politically correct" thing of changing their training to an ambulatory setting. Dr. Stead, unless I am mistaken, was not touting inpatient services because they are inpatient services. He was talking about how important it is for a young doctor to be inundated by terribly sick patients during his or her training. He mentioned Grady, Boston City, and Cincinnati General hospitals. I understand what he means; I trained at Bellevue. Are the wards at North Carolina hospitals filled with the terribly sick, hopeless and helpless, down and out, and soon to be dead? I doubt it. If they aren't, they don't meet Dr. Stead's criteria. And if they aren't in that league, and if Dr. Stead is correct about the effect of such training, then Dr. Greenfield shouldn't (like all the other chiefs in the country) merely protect his turf—he should figure out how to provide Stead's kind of experience. The hospital population in New York doesn't cut Dr. Stead's mustard either. Bellevue is an exception because of AIDS, the homeless, the poor, and the down and out. But the students don't want to go there, the dummies, because there's "too much AIDS."

Maybe we have to take young physicians, give them one year on the ward at a U.S. hospital, then ship them to Zaire, Thailand, or Bangladesh for one year of heart-breaking work among the really sick. Then we would bring them back to the wards and ambulatory setting of the world of the clean and neat. I'm not kidding. After all, we're not talking about every doctor, but only those whose lives will be devoted to the care of the sick.

The other documents that speak to the education of students in much the same way that Dr. Stead talks about house officers are Ludwig Eichna's papers about medical education published more than 10 years ago. Eichna was chair of the Department of Medicine at Downstate Medical School and Kings County Hospital (which has the "right kind" of patients). When he retired, he went back to medical school as a fully matriculated medical student! After it was over he wrote three papers about his conclusions.¹⁻³ They are quite rich, but somewhat cryptic. Nevertheless, they are diamonds, worth finding and reading. He was a crusty man—no less so as he aged—but he, like Stead, had something to say...

When I am the Czar...(I'll be even richer than the Czar. Because I'll be the Czar and I'll have a small practice on the side.)

To the Editor:

I was a member of the Duke School of Medicine Class of 1965. I was very stimulated by Dr. Stead's piece in the Journal (NC Med J 1993;54:645-50).

Although my children, like those of Dr. Stead's parents, were also bright, I am confident that I was quite different from his mother and father—I was pretty dumb. Nevertheless, only one of my children has followed me into medicine. I can't decide whether my children made their decisions because I influenced them positively or negatively. In any case, I am sending each of my children a copy of Dr. Stead's Lecocq Lecture because I think it will be as interesting and as thought-provoking for them as it was for me.

The curriculum I was exposed to as a medical student was a little different than that of most of my classmates: I spent a year in Duke's Research Training Program and ultimately Professor Robert Hill's biochemistry laboratory. I think Dr. Hill is still embarrassed that someone he devoted so much time to ended up being a neurosurgeon. Nevertheless, the experience was really important to me. I learned discipline in that lab and methods of thinking and communicating that have been important for me in my professional life. And I don't think he required me to memorize anything. Dr. Stead's advice points medical education to the right track.

Dr. Stead retired when I was on Duke's surgical house staff. I viewed him as an old man back then. Now I am rapidly becoming an old man myself, and he sounds like a very young one. Congratulations!

Read Me!

To the Editor:

I accepted your challenge, as I have in almost all issues of the North Carolina Medical Journal, to read every word in each issue, and I enjoyed reading your repeated challenge in the December issue (NC Med J 1993;54:618). This was a better issue than most of the many good ones, particularly the educational article "Gold, Frankincense, Myrrh, and Medicine" by Dennis A. Greene, MD (NC Med J 1993;54:620-2) about the early history of the Bible and a number of things about Israel.

The article by Leslie Newton and Nicholas Stratas, MD, about the actions of the N. C. Board of Medical Examiners (NC Med J 1993;54:625-32) was particularly meaningful for me, a former chair of the Board. Dr. Stratas has had a distinguished career with the Board, and I think the analysis that he and Ms. Newton made of the disciplinary actions of the Board and how it goes about them is a real education to all those who are puzzled by what the Board has to do.

But nothing quite compares to the article "Gene Stead Looks at Doctoring" (NC Med J 1993;54:645-50). I have been a "studier of Stead" ever since I was a surgical intern at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital when Dr. Stead came there with Soma Weiss. I have enjoyed him at every opportunity, and I particularly enjoyed this frank article, which I hope will not be his last (though he threatens it will). I was flattered when he asked me to participate with him as associate editor of the Journal, and I have enjoyed that association with you as well.

Dr. Stead made a lot of contributions to the lives of many people, and although it is not difficult to disagree with him about a lot of things, it is very difficult to defend oneself in such a disagreement.

Thank you for running such a good journal. I hope that North Carolina will continue to have its own journal for the state Medical Society because of its great importance to the physicians of this state, to students, and to historians of the future.

Eben Alexander, Jr., MD

To the Editor:

The December issue of the Journal was superb and timely. I enjoyed your editorial and hope that you get many responses. Gene Stead's article was interesting, and, as usual provocative. Dr. Carreras' "Four-E" model (NC Med J 1993;54:652-3) was also provocative. I would prefer the "Three-A" model for the complete physician: astuteness, affability, and most of all availability.

I have been on the editorial board of a number of medical journals over the years and the two that I have enjoyed most are the North Carolina Medical Journal, for its homey and local/state orientation—it's really a state journal, and Emergency Medicine, where my friend Harry Atkins is editor. This journal always has a good mix of current clinical articles, brief and well illustrated and presented. Reading it has always been a learning experience for me.

Jay M. Arena, MD
Professor Emeritus
Department of Pediatrics
Box 3024, Duke Univ. Medical Center
Durham, NC 27710

Dr. Neelon comments:

I much appreciate the comments of Drs. Alexander and Arena. Both of them touch on the thing that makes me most proud to be editor of the North Carolina Medical Journal, but Dr. Arena said it most clearly: "It's really a state journal." Many state medical journals look to me like poor imitations of national journals (or like newsletters from the society office). North Carolina's does not. In part that's because we are blessed with the felicitous combination of responsive and enlightened leadership in Raleigh and an articulate, communicative membership—one that writes to and for the Journal, that enlightens and entertains and educates us all. My thanks to all our correspondents and my prayer that all of you will continue to read what we print and to send your thoughts to us.

Board Review: Sustaining Quality Medical Practice

To the Editor:

It is with great pleasure that I anticipate each month's Journal. Not simply because you publish material that I forward to you but because of the increasingly interesting nature of the Journal itself.

Regarding my article in the December issue about the North Carolina Board of Medical Examiners (NC Med J 1993; 54:625-32), I welcome the comments of Dr. John Dees who has made significant contributions to medicine both clinically and organizationally in his distinguished career. Our article provokes many questions, and I hope they will be asked.

Although I am no longer on the Board, I hope that each medical specialty will identify a small committee or representative group that can engage with the Board in reviewing the Board's experience with that specialty. Out of this process we can hope to gain insights regarding the steps we must take to sustain and increase the quality of medical practice.

The special needs of the primary care physician must be attended to, particularly in light of developing health care reform. However, attention to other specialties will be necessary as well, and can only serve to further improve our care.

Health Watch:

On Alzheimer's Disease

To the Editor:

I'm writing concerning the Health Watch section on Alzheimer's disease that appeared in the January Journal (NC Med J 1994;55:27-30). I take it that much of this four-page enclosure was obtained from the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association and, to my knowledge, this has not been reviewed by the North Carolina Neurological Society.

Certainly, the bulk of this material presented is true and factual. Of concern is the absence of reference to other medical conditions that may mimic Alzheimer's disease, (e.g. pernicious anemia or depression). Also of alarm is the absence of reference to COGNEX (Tacrine HCL). This drug was approved in 1993 for the therapy of Alzheimer's disease. Although this agent is not curative, widespread neurological experience has shown that up to 60% of Alzheimer patients may benefit and that 20% may have significant and sometimes spectacular improvement in their cognitive function.

DEWEES ISLAND, A PRIVATE OCEANFRONT RETREAT TO CALL YOUR OWN... MINUTES FROM CHARLESTON, SC

number of homes on the 1,206-acre island to only 150.

The location of the island is extraordinary...its pristine surroundings are perfect for fresh & saltwater fishing, crabbing, shrimping, and oystering, yet it's just minutes to downtown Charleston and the Charleston International Airport. It truly is an island like nowhere else in the world.

Instructions for Authors

Manuscript Preparation

Prepare papers according to the "Uniform Requirements for Manuscripts Submitted to Biomedical Journals" (N Engl J Med 1991;324:424-8) with these exceptions: 1) no abstract, 2) no running title, and 3) report measurements in metric units; use of the International System of Units (SI) is optional.

Text (including Letters to the Editor) should be typed with one-inch margins and double-spaced. Title page should include address, and phone and fax numbers of the corresponding author. Submit two copies or a cover letter and a 3 1/2- or 5 1/4-inch computer disc with text written in MS DOS compatible format (WordPerfect, Microsoft Word, Displaywrite, or ASCII).

Submit illustrations, in duplicate, in the form of color 35mm slides or glossy photographs, or as black-and-white glossy photographs. Label them with author's name, note their position in the text, and indicate image orientation, if necessary. Do not write on the backs of prints. This can damage them. Type legends separately. Tables should be typed, double-spaced, one to a page. Tables must have titles and consecutive Arabic numbers.

Minimize references (no more than 15 if possible, preferably 10 or fewer). The "Uniform Requirements" cited above contain the format for references. Authors are responsible for the accuracy and pertinence of all citations. Avoid abbreviations entirely if possible, or keep them to a minimum. When used, completely define abbreviations at the first usage in the text.

Manuscript Review and Editing

A medically qualified editor reads all manuscripts, and most are also reviewed by members of the North Carolina Medical Society. Submitted manuscripts must not be under consideration for publication elsewhere. Decisions to publish or not are made by the editors, advised by peer reviewers.

We encourage a relatively informal writing style since we believe this improves communication. Imagine yourself talking with your audience—as long as this doesn't lead you to scientific or linguistic inaccuracy. Be brief, clear, simple, and precise.

We edit accepted manuscripts for clarity, style, and conciseness. Except for letters, authors receive a copy of the edited manuscript for approval before publication.

Authors retain copyright to articles published in the North Carolina Medical Journal, but the North Carolina Medical Society copyrights the contents of each issue. Requests for permission to reprint all or part of an article must be submitted in writing to the address below and negotiated with the author and editor jointly. Reprinted material must carry a credit line identifying that it appeared in the North Carolina Medical Journal. Address manuscripts and correspondence to:

Screening for Oral Cancer

It Takes More Than Just a Look

Jeffrey G. Wong, MD, and John R. Feussner, MD

"Mr. Jones has listened to your explanation about the lack of benefit of a chest x-ray. He states he will continue to abstain from cigarettes and is interested in improving his overall health.

He is worried that his uncle, also a cigarette smoker, died of 'mouth cancer.' Mr. Jones wonders if there are any tests that can assure him that he isn't developing mouth cancer."

What should we tell Mr. Jones? Using the six guidelines provided in our first article on health care screening (NC Med J 1993;54:218-21), we will formulate a recommendation for him, reviewing each guideline individually in order to arrive at a reasonable therapeutic plan.

Target Disease Considerations

1. Is the disease common or serious enough to warrant screening?

Yes. Cancers of the mouth and oral cavity represent about 6% of all cancers diagnosed each year in the U.S. This year, about 30,000 new cases will be discovered and some 7,700 deaths will be attributed to this disease.¹ It is only one-fifth as common as cancers of the breast, colon, or lung but it is more than twice as common as cervical cancer.² Since most oral cancers develop in patients over 40, the incidence rate is expected to rise as the population ages; one study in Connecticut has already demonstrated this trend.³

2. Is there a presymptomatic phase in the natural history of the disease during which time a test can detect it?

Yes. Oral cancer usually starts as a lesion in the mouth, on the palate, or under the tongue. Early, localized oral cancers are often asymptomatic and symptoms only appear when regional or distant disease is present.⁴ Unfortunately, even when asymptomatic lesions are seen, patients and doctors may mistake them for "canker sores" or other minor, transient abnormalities.

The test used to detect oral cancer is a careful physical examination of the oral cavity and biopsy of any suspicious lesions. In one of the earliest papers looking at oral cancer, Mashberg and Meyers described the anatomic location and size of asymptomatic squamous cell carcinomas; they recommended biopsy of all persistent (present for 14 days or more) mucosal abnormalities.⁵

3. Are there effective treatments for the disease available to use after early detection?

Possibly yes. Oral cancer is clinically staged as follows: Stage I—tumor 2 cm or less in diameter and no evidence of lymph node involvement; Stage II—tumor 2 cm to 4 cm in diameter but with no lymph node involvement; Stage III—tumor greater than 4 cm in size or a tumor of any size with an ipsilateral lymph node less than 3 cm in diameter; Stage IV—a large lesion with deep invasion, or the presence of a lymph node larger than 3 cm in diameter, or evidence of distant metastases.⁶ The standard treatment of oral cancer consists of surgical removal and adjuvant radiotherapy as indicated.

The natural history of oral cancer is not known, but some data suggest that patients with early-stage oral cancer have a better prognosis than those with advanced disease at the time of diagnosis. A Canadian study demonstrated a five-year survival rate of 63% in patients with localized disease compared to 17% in patients with distant metastases.⁶ However, these results may be misleading due to lead-time and length-time biases (see NC Med J 1993;54:438-40).

Screening Test Considerations

1. Are there screening tests with acceptable sensitivity and specificity available to detect the target disease?

Who knows? There are two methods by which we can screen for oral cancer: inspection and palpation of the mouth and adjacent structures, and the use of toluidine chloride oral rinses. Examination should include careful visual inspection, but many cancers occur on the ventral and lateral aspects of the tongue and on the soft palate, places not easily seen. Therefore, the recommended examination also involves the use of a gloved hand and gauze pad to fully palpate the oral cavity including the area beneath the tongue, the floor of the mouth, and along all buccal surfaces.⁷ There is, unfortunately, little information on the sensitivity of this detailed examination and no data on the accuracy of this procedure (compared to the reference standard of tissue biopsy). In one study, dentists were better at evaluating the oral cavity than were medical physicians, and regular check-ups by a dentist led to diagnosis of a greater proportion of early-stage cancers (70% in Stage I or II) compared to the group that did not have such regular check-ups (40% in Stage I or II).⁶

Drs. Wong and Feussner are faculty members with the Division of General Internal Medicine, Box 3375, Duke University Medical Center, Durham 27710.

Population-based oral cancer and precancer detection programs have been reported from Sri Lanka⁸ and from rural Virginia,⁹ and the results are mixed. In Sri Lanka, more than 87,000 patients were screened and roughly 6% referred for biopsy. The true positive rate of biopsied lesions ranged from 62%-80%. In Virginia, more than 10,000 patients were screened and, again, about 6% sent for biopsy. In contrast to the results from Sri Lanka, however, the true positive rate in Virginia (that is, the percentage of lesions that were malignant or premalignant) was only 31%. Both of these studies employed a fairly extensive oral examination that may be impractical for a busy clinician to use on each patient.

The dye toluidine chloride (TCl), also known as toluidine blue, selectively stains acidic tissue components such as exposed DNA or RNA. It has been used as a mouth rinse or applied directly to suspicious lesions. Normal tissues do not stain with TCl but neoplastic tissues do. Unfortunately, other inflammatory, non-cancerous lesions stain too, leading to a relatively high false positive rate. In addition, lesions with limited dysplasia or atypia may not stain consistently and therefore give false negative results.¹⁰ A meta-analysis indicated that use of TCl by oral surgeons gave an estimated sensitivity of 93%-98% and a specificity of 73%-93% in an extremely high-risk patient population.¹¹ No prospective studies evaluate the efficacy of this test in mass screening programs.

2. Can an appropriate population of high-risk patients be identified to undergo screening?

Yes. Major risk factors for the development of oral cancer have been identified (Table 1). This is a disease of the elderly with an average age at diagnosis of 65 years.¹ The use of tobacco (of all kinds, but especially chewing tobacco) and excessive alcohol consumption have been linked to higher rates of oral cancer. It has been postulated that the use of tobacco and alcohol together exerts a synergistic effect on carcinogenesis.¹² Other risk factors that may increase the risk of oral cancer include poor dental hygiene, malnutrition, the Plummer-Vinson Syndrome, and excessive mouthwash use.^{13,14}

3. Do the benefits of screening justify the costs of the screening strategy?

Who knows? Without data on sensitivity and specificity it is very difficult to perform cost/benefit analyses. The costs of screening include the cost of the physician's time spent performing an extensive oral evaluation, the costs of the biopsy and of the histopathological examination of identified lesions, the costs of the TCl dye (if used), and the costs of treatment for positive findings. Other, harder to quantitate costs include the pain experienced by an asymptomatic patient who undergoes biopsy and the "chagrin factor" related to patients who are cleared by a "normal" examination only to later develop oral cancer. And finally, the evidence that early detection of oral cancer significantly improves patient outcomes is weak and based on indirect findings.

2. Tobacco use, especially chewing tobacco.

Recommendations

The National Cancer Institute¹⁵ and the American Cancer Society¹⁶ recommend that an oral examination (inspection and palpation) be included in the periodic health evaluation. The Canadian Task Force¹⁷ recommends an annual visual inspection of the mouth for cancer in males and in all smokers. The U.S. Preventive Services Task Force¹⁸ does not recommend full oral examinations for asymptomatic persons but states that it may be prudent to offer such an examination to high-risk patients and that everyone over 65 receive regular dental check-ups.

Mr. Jones is at somewhat higher risk for oral cancer because he had been a cigarette smoker. Having carefully inspected his mouth as part of our routine clinical examination, we would still strongly recommend that he also be seen by his dentist. □

Next in our series on screening strategies for disease, we will discuss the following:

Carol Jones, the 22-year-old daughter of Mr. Jones, comes to the office for periodic examination. She is a senior in college, does not smoke cigarettes, has no significant medical history but has a severe sunburn from her recent spring break trip to the beach. She says that she usually "gets a little burned each year," but that this is the worst she has ever had despite using over-the-counter sunburn cream, and she is still very uncomfortable. On physical exam, she has red hair and even redder skin with an underlying fair complexion. On examination you find no worrisome skin lesions.

What should you tell her about the dangers of sun exposure, the need to regularly use sunscreens, and her risk for skin cancer? How should you plan to follow her?

Eureka!

It's a Negative Study!

Edward C. Halperin, MD, Deputy Editor

The figure of the solitary researcher, succeeding against overwhelming odds because of a flash of genius, is one of our enduring cultural icons. Like most other schoolchildren, I was taught the story of Archimedes (287 B.C.-212 B.C.)—the famous Greek philosopher/scientist. Trying to find a way to determine whether the king's crown was pure gold or was adulterated with silver, Archimedes plopped into the bathtub to think things over. When the water ran over the sides of the tub, he realized that his own body mass had displaced the water. Convinced that one could ascertain density by displacement of a fluid, he ran through the streets of Syracuse shouting his discovery, "Eureka! Eureka!" ("I have found it, I have found it"). Of course, he neglected to put on his Christian Dior bathrobe before charging through the streets. Thus, a principle of physics and streaking were discovered simultaneously.

The Myth of the Big Breakthrough

The notion of the solitary scientist winning by virtue of making the "big breakthrough" was reinforced, for me, on the Saturday afternoons of my childhood. When the New York Yankees were rained out, the local television station would fill the void in programming with "Rain-Out Theater." To this constant fare of ancient and honorable black-and-white cinema was added my favorite Sunday afternoon television occupation, "Picture for a Sunday Afternoon." Who can forget Alexander Graham Bell (played by Don Ameche) working tirelessly in his attic to invent the telephone (and, incidentally, win the heart of Loretta Young)? Remember Spencer Tracy's Thomas Edison, sketching out the prototype of the phonograph on a piece of scrap paper and then, within three minutes, demonstrating his success by reciting "Mary Had a Little Lamb" into the device—all while heroic music in the background swelled to a climax?

Dr. Halperin is Professor, Department of Radiation Oncology, Box 3085, Duke University Medical Center, Durham 27710.

Far be it for me to denounce happy childhood memories. It is important to note, however, that the myth of the solitary scientist lives on and with some unpleasant consequences for modern medicine. Recent studies published in the Journal of the American Medical Association (1990;263:1385 and 1991;266:1824) point out that the popular press is biased toward reporting "positive" rather than "negative" medical studies. Your local newspaper or television news shows are far more likely to comment on a clinical trial that appears to offer some "positive" results for the public than to offer a report of a negative study. Thus, the public is much more likely to hear shouts of "Eureka!" about the treatment of cancer, multiple sclerosis, or arthritis than they are to hear about the follow-up trials that show that some earlier "breakthrough" wasn't much of a breakthrough at all. I suppose the press can't be faulted. Nobody wants to hear how many cats didn't climb up a tree yesterday. On the other hand, think of how often a patient comes into your office clutching a newspaper clipping touting some new "breakthrough" reported yesterday and wanting to know whether or not the treatment is appropriate for them or for a loved one.

The Slow Mill of Science

The truth about science, of course, is not to be found in mythical descriptions of Archimedes, Alexander Graham Bell, or Thomas Edison. In fact most science is halting: one step forward and three steps back. Just as important as positive trials are the negative trials that show paths that ought not be taken. The benefit of our system of peer-reviewed research publications is that fraud, statistical variation, and unusual circumstances of luck will, eventually, be found out when other people try and fail to reproduce the results of earlier work. We ought to be just as grateful to those whose labor shows what doesn't work as we are to those who find out what does.

I ran up against a similar problem myself in my work as a radiation oncologist. I have always been fascinated by the number of patients who ingest vitamins or swab various vitamin-laden emollients over themselves in the hopes of preventing cancer, treating cancer, or avoiding the side effects of conventional anti-cancer therapy. Among the most popular nostrums are various forms of vitamin C. A few years ago some colleagues and I investigated whether topical vitamin C could prevent radiation-induced dermatitis. In a randomized, prospective, double-blind trial, we found that topical vitamin C was no help. I fired the resultant manuscript off to a journal only to have it promptly returned. The managing editor said that the study was well-designed, well-performed, and the science was good, but that they couldn't publish my paper because "of course, it is a negative trial." I responded with a discussion of bias against reporting negative trials. Eventually, my paper was published (Int J Rad Oncol Biol Phys 1993;26:413), but I was stung.

Recently I had a call from a representative of the Raleigh News & Observer. They were looking for a quote about a new "breakthrough" in the treatment of AIDS. The story was familiar to me from the Saturday afternoons of my childhood: A hard-working medical student, in the face of great odds, had discovered that three-drug therapy was a superior way to treat AIDS. Those of you who followed the story in the popular press know, of course, that the results were shortly found by other investigators to be less than they were cracked up to be. The story, however, was almost too good not to be true—another solitary, heroic researcher succeeding against the odds.

Most biomedical science is collaborative, derivative, slow, and subject to many false starts and dead ends. Unequivocal breakthroughs are rare and, as medical historian Richard Gordon points out, when actually accomplished the researcher often hasn't the slightest idea of what was being broken through. Unfortunately, this scenario is just not the stuff of successful screenplays. Nonetheless, the truth about research and the value of negative trials should keep clinicians from prematurely accepting "new" therapies. We can hope for more restrained reporting about science that will diminish the cycle of raised, then dashed, expectations of the public about what research can deliver. Doctors, as a species, shout "Eureka!" more often than it's warranted. □

Organ Donation

Rescuing Triumph From Tragedy

Thomas V. Clancy, MD

Not long ago, an experienced nurse devoted to the care of diabetic patients—many of whom are on dialysis—asked me if I would write an editorial that would focus on the importance of caring for donors and on the unique relationship that develops between doctors and the families of donors. Although we are all familiar with the benefits of transplantation and are aware of the great need for donor organs, other less recognized issues emerge from this situation.

As the 20th century comes to a close, science fiction fantasies have now become part of our daily medical practice. Medical research has opened doors for survival to thousands of people—young and old—previously doomed to premature death from irreversible organ disease. That physicians and surgeons can prolong life through the transplantation of internal organs from one human being to another represents an unprecedented giant step into future medicine.

The Difficulties of Decision

Accompanying such advances are new and complex life situations with which patients, families, and doctors must grapple. Although media coverage of personal tragedy seems endless, one cannot prepare for the experience of visiting the hospital bedside of a child, spouse, or close relative who suddenly becomes a “donor candidate.” Under duress, family members first hear the question, “Do you want to have the organs donated?” Federal law mandates the organ request.

One’s immediate environment may influence the answer. Today, many hospitals have on their staffs dedicated physicians, nurses, members of the clergy, patient representatives, and personnel from organ procurement agencies who assist, educate, and counsel families confronting the crisis. These individuals are committed to the care of potential or consented donors. The patient remains the center of medical attention until a decision is made to either donate or terminate care.

The Magnitude of the Problem

Two thousand potential recipients of organ transplants died in 1990 while awaiting the ultimate match of their lives; 15,000 others received suitable organs and continued to live. At present, more than 30,000 people await organ transplantation and more than 200,000 people await the donation of specialized tissues. Unfortunately, the number of organ donors has not increased during the past five years. The discrepancy between the number of organs donated and the number of patients awaiting transplantation continues to grow. Our potential to reduce the anxiety and despair caused by the anticipation of “dying in the waiting line” lies in our ability to learn from those families who have already made the commitment.

The Triumph of Organ Donation

Among the greatest rewards of organ donation is the sense of purpose and fulfillment that comes to those who make such a donation. Unconditional generosity becomes the answered prayer for multiple others—strangers—still clinging to life. Gifts of such magnitude defy measurement. A profound belief in the preciousness of life allows people to look beyond their own crisis and consider the plight of others similarly compromised by fate. We hold in utmost regard those who, at a time when focusing on others does not come naturally, provide this miraculous opportunity. Their decision to donate is a decision for life. It represents the rescue of triumph from tragedy. □

Spontaneous Intrapartum Rupture of the Liver

Philip H. Pearce, MD, FACOG

Spontaneous hepatic rupture is a very uncommon but catastrophic and potentially life-threatening complication of pregnancy. It occurs most often in association with severe preeclampsia or the HELLP syndrome (Hemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets).^{1,2} I used Medline to search the literature from 1976 through 1991 and found only 65 reported cases plus eight other anecdotally recorded cases.

I add here my personal experience with a 66th case because it alerts all physicians to the possible pitfalls of a condition (pregnancy) that is usually considered more an altered but normal physiological state than a pathological one. There can be no doubt that spontaneous hepatic rupture is a frightfully lethal disease. Since 1976 maternal survival has improved from 41% to 62%, but fetal survival remains low and unchanged at 38% to 40%. The results in my case and my perusal of the literature allow me to summarize current methods of diagnosing and managing this disorder.

My Patient

vomiting, and epigastric pain. Her blood pressure was 225/118; the tendon reflexes were hyperactive; there was no edema. Urine gave a strong reaction for protein. The fetal heart rate was 110 to 120; there was no uterine or epigastric tenderness and no evidence of labor; the cervix was closed and thick, the vertex high. She was considered to be preeclamptic and magnesium sulfate was given.

She gave a history of hypertension associated with migraine headaches as a teenager, but had no recent symptoms; she was chronically obese. Her prenatal course had been uneventful until the 37th week of gestation when her BP was found to be 130/98 but there was no proteinuria, her reflexes were normal, the uterine fundus measured 35 cms, and there was no edema. Thereafter, she was seen every three to four days. BP remained in the range of 132-150/90-100, but came to normal with resting. Urine protein was trace to 1+. She was asked to remain at bed rest but did not follow this advice. Five days before admission, laboratory studies showed normal blood cell counts, platelet count, bilirubin, uric acid, and liver function test results.

Hospital course: Two hours after admission, we decided to proceed with operative delivery because of mild fetal bradycardia, an unfavorable cervix, and because laboratory results on admission showed evidence of the HELLP syndrome (the bilirubin had increased from its earlier value of 0.5 to 0.9; there was marked elevation of the lactate dehydrogenase (LDH) at 1635 (normal 118-242), the alanine aminotransferase (ALT) at 1563 (normal 0-40), and the aspartate aminotransferase (AST) 981 (normal 0-45); and the platelet count had fallen to 87,000). Immediately after administration of epidural anesthesia the BP fell to 70/30, and the fetal heart rate to 80.

Operation: Five hundred cc of intra-peritoneal blood were noted when the abdomen was opened. A low transverse Cesarean section resulted in 300 cc of blood loss from the uterus. There was marked oligohydramnios and meconium. The liver was exposed and noted to be a mottled brown color but there was no active bleeding. A flap or defect was palpable in the anterior right lobe of the liver. BP was 120/50 at the end of surgery. The female infant weighed 2030 gm; the pH of the cord blood was 6.72; Apgar scores were 1, 5, and 7. Subsequent growth and development were normal.

Post-operative course: The patient's hematocrit fell from 40 to 22 and her platelet count to 32,000; prothrombin time was 15.3 (normal 11.3-12.7); partial thromboplastin time, 39 (normal 20.4-30.4); fibrinogen, 210 (normal 173-240); fibrin split products, >40 (normal <10), and the concentration of the D-dimer of fibrinogen was increased. These data were compatible with disseminated intravascular coagulation (consumptive coagulopathy). Her liver function worsened with a bilirubin rising to 3.9, LDH to 2305, AST to 2190, and ALT to 1450. Computerized tomographic (CT) scans of the abdomen on the day of delivery (Fig. 1) and the third postpartum day revealed hepatic necrosis, as well as evidence of subcapsular hematoma and free fluid in the peritoneal cavity. Proteinuria cleared rapidly after delivery and urinary output was good.

She was treated with prophylactic antibiotics and nifedipine. She received four units of packed red blood cells, four units of fresh frozen plasma, two units of Plasmanate, and eight units of platelets. She was seen by general surgery and hematology consultants, and transferred for six days to Duke University Medical Center in case she would need immediate specialized liver surgery. Fortunately, the patient did well with supportive care and no surgery was required. All laboratory tests returned to normal by six weeks postpartum. Nifedipine was discontinued 12 weeks postpartum and the patient remained normotensive.

She was placed on oral contraceptives, but despite this became pregnant. She requested interruption of pregnancy and sterilization, which was performed six months after her delivery. At laparoscopy the appearance of the liver was entirely normal except for minor adhesions near the site of the laceration previously described. To my knowledge this is the first time that laparoscopic inspection of the liver has documented complete healing in a patient managed conservatively for liver rupture.

Fig 1: CT scan on the day of delivery showing necrosis and subcapsular hematoma in the right lobe of the liver.

Discussion

Abercrombie first described hepatic rupture during pregnancy in 1844.³ A review in 1976⁴ cited 91 cases and quoted a maternal mortality of 59% and a fetal mortality of 62%. My Medline search disclosed 65 additional cases plus the case reported here, and eight other reported anecdotally.⁵ The maternal mortality in these 74 recent cases had fallen to 38%, but the fetal mortality had not improved (31% were stillborn and 31% died postnatally).

All practitioners who care for pregnant women need to be aware of the hepatic response to eclamptic syndromes. A triad of findings strongly suggests liver hematoma, necrosis, or rupture: toxemia (preeclampsia, eclampsia, or HELLP syndrome), pain (right upper quadrant or epigastric), and shock. Usually the earliest laboratory abnormality is an acute drop in the platelet count, followed shortly by a rapid rise in liver enzymes (especially AST and ALT). Hemolysis may occur, leading to an increase in bilirubin and LDH and changes in the peripheral blood smear.

Disseminated intravascular coagulopathy is often seen and can be considered present if one has any three of the following findings: prolongation of the prothrombin time or the partial thromboplastin time or both, hypofibrinogenemia, increase in the degradation products of fibrin (the most specific of which is D-dimer), or thrombocytopenia.

The sequence of events is thought to be as follows: Hepatic necrosis and associated clotting abnormalities lead to intrahepatic and subcapsular hemorrhage; the intrahepatic hematoma may then spontaneously rupture its contents into the peritoneum. Intraperitoneal bleeding can be detected at surgery as in our case or by paracentesis, ultrasound, or CT scan. Liver hematoma without rupture can only be detected by an imaging procedure such as CT, ultrasound, liver-spleen scan, or hepatic arteriography. Patients with liver hematoma, with or without rupture, should be delivered promptly by Cesarean section in order to avoid the trauma of vaginal delivery and to improve the survival rate of the mother and fetus.⁶⁻⁹ Postpartum patients who are hemodynamically stable may be managed conservatively by giving blood products as appropriate for their clinical condition.^{5,10-13} Hemodynamically stable patients may need embolization of the hepatic artery^{7,14-17} if there is evidence of an enlarging hematoma or small rupture of the liver or when surgery gives only partial hemostasis. Patients who are unstable, or who do not respond to conservative management, require surgery to drain the hematoma and acquire hemostasis by suture, use of topical hemostatic agents, hepatic artery ligation, or packing the liver. Hepatic resection should be used only when the surgeon is unable to control life-threatening hemorrhage by any other means, since the underlying hepatic damage of toxemia is diffuse, but is reversible after delivery.¹⁷

seminated intravascular coagulation in four; adult respiratory distress syndrome in two; hepatic failure in one; and cardiac arrest in one. No cause was reported in 10. (The numbers do not add because some list multiple causes of death.)

One issue I have not seen addressed in the literature relates to the risk of subsequent pregnancy in patients who have previously experienced toxemia-related liver rupture. In my review I found reports of only five other patients who had become pregnant after a liver rupture. Two delivered without complications¹⁸ and one was delivered prematurely by Cesarean section but without liver function abnormality.¹⁹ Two other reports each mentioned a subsequent pregnancy with normal BP at six to eight weeks of pregnancy but no outcome.^{17,20} Since the HELLP syndrome occurs in 4% to 12% of patients with severe preeclampsia or eclampsia, and is reported to recur in 4% to 25% of subsequent pregnancies,²¹ the prior presence of this syndrome would imply that a subsequent pregnancy poses substantial risk.

If we are to reduce the severe morbidity and mortality of liver rupture as a complication of pregnancy-induced hypertension, physicians must be alert to the symptoms and the laboratory data that aid in the diagnosis and management of this dreadful disorder. Early recognition and an aggressive multidisciplinary approach (utilizing advice from radiology, anesthesiology, surgery, hematology, nephrology, and cardiology consultants) should improve survival. Early recognition may also lead to successful resolution without surgery, since in 15 of the 66 cases I reviewed, patients survived with non-operative management of the liver rupture. □

YOHIMBINE HCl

Description: Yohimbine is a 3a-15a-20B-17a-hydroxy Yohimbine-16a-carboxylic acid methyl ester. The alkaloid is found in Rubaceae and related trees. Also in Rauwolfia Serpentina (L) Benth. Yohimbine is an indolalkylamine alkaloid with chemical similarity to reserpine. It is a crystalline powder, odorless. Each compressed tablet contains (1/12 gr.) 5.4 mg of Yohimbine Hydrochloride.

Action: Yohimbine blocks presynaptic alpha-2 adrenergic receptors. Its action on peripheral blood vessels resembles that of reserpine, though it is weaker and of short duration. Yohimbine's peripheral autonomic nervous system effect is to increase parasympathetic (cholinergic) and decrease sympathetic (adrenergic) activity. It is to be noted that in male sexual performance, erection is linked to cholinergic activity and to alpha-2 adrenergic blockade which may theoretically result in increased penile inflow, decreased penile outflow or both.

Yohimbine exerts a stimulating action on the mood and may increase anxiety. Such actions have not been adequately studied or related to dosage, although they appear to require high doses of the drug. Yohimbine has a mild anti-diuretic action, probably via stimulation of hypothalamic centers and release of posterior pituitary hormone.

Reportedly, Yohimbine exerts no significant influence on cardiac stimulation and other effects mediated by B-adrenergic receptors, its effect on blood pressure, if any, would be to lower it; however no adequate studies are at hand to quantitate this effect in terms of Yohimbine dosage.

Indications: Yocon[®] is indicated as a sympatholytic and mydriatic. It may have activity as an aphrodisiac.

Contraindications: Renal diseases, and patient's sensitive to the drug. In view of the limited and inadequate information at hand, no precise tabulation can be offered of additional contraindications.

Warning: Generally, this drug is not proposed for use in females and certainly must not be used during pregnancy. Neither is this drug proposed for use in pediatric, geriatric or cardio-renal patients with gastric or duodenal ulcer history. Nor should it be used in conjunction with mood-modifying drugs such as antidepressants, or in psychiatric patients in general.

Adverse Reactions: Yohimbine readily penetrates the (CNS) and produces a complex pattern of responses in lower doses than required to produce peripheral a-adrenergic-blockade. These include, anti-diuresis, a general picture of central excitation including elevation of blood pressure and heart rate, increased motor activity, irritability and tremor. Sweating, nausea and vomiting are common after parenteral administration of the drug.^{1,2} Also dizziness, headache, skin flushing reported when used orally.^{1,3}

Dosage and Administration: Experimental dosage reported in treatment of erectile impotence.^{1,3,4} 1 tablet (5.4 mg) 3 times a day, to adult males taken orally. Occasional side effects reported with this dosage are nausea, dizziness or nervousness. In the event of side effects dosage to be reduced to 1/2 tablet 3 times a day, followed by gradual increases to 1 tablet 3 times a day. Reported therapy not more than 10 weeks.³

How Supplied: Oral tablets of Yocon[®] 1/12 gr. 5.4 mg in bottles of 100's NDC 53159-001-01 and 1000's NDC 53159-001-10.

Takey Crist, MD, FACOG, FACS, M.R. Barnes, MD, FAFP, and W.C. Whitehurst, MD

Norplant® is a long-acting, reversible hormone contraceptive for women that the U.S. Food and Drug Administration recently approved for use. It has been tested for 20 years in 46 countries, and more than 500,000 women have used it as a contraceptive method. Sixteen countries other than the U.S. also permit its use.

The Norplant® System consists of six small capsules (2.4 mm x 34 mm) that are inserted subdermally, in radial fashion, in the medial aspect of the upper arm (see Figure). Each capsule contains 35 mgs of levonorgestrel. They provide effective contraception for up to five years.

Several months ago, one of our patients came to the office requesting the removal of six Norplant® capsules. Her obstetrician made a surgical incision in the medial aspect of her upper right arm and easily removed five of the capsules, but could not locate the sixth one by digital probing. We referred the patient to the Radiology Department at Onslow Memorial Hospital in Jacksonville where the sixth capsule was faintly visualized, on plain radiographs using soft-tissue technique.

The patient then underwent real-time sonography in hopes of a more precise localization, but the capsule could not be tained, but the capsule could not be identified, again probably due to the edema and air in the incision site.

We did not actually subject the patient to magnetic resonance imaging but we wanted to determine whether or not that technique could be helpful. We placed an identical Norplant® capsule on a water phantom and obtained multiple T1-weighted and T2-weighted images, but again the capsule could not be seen.

Finally, using intermittent fluoroscopy and persistent digital probing, the obstetrician, was able to localize and remove the sixth capsule. Nevertheless, our experience with this patient has demonstrated to us that a Norplant® capsule can be very difficult to precisely localize—even in a modern radiology department—when the capsule is surrounded by subcutaneous edema and air. We believe that the manufacturers of the Norplant® capsules and similar devices should modify their products so that they can be more easily localized by sonography or fluoroscopy when the devices cannot be located by palpation and probing. □ visualized, probably because of interfering soft tissue edema and air left by the earlier incision. The patient was taken to the computed tomography suite, and multiple thin (3 mm) slices were ob-

Back Pain

LIFT IT SAFE

The American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons has launched a nationwide public education program on prevention of back pain — Lift It Safe. The program is aimed at professional health care workers and home caregivers — persons caring for an injured or ill family member at home — as well as industrial and business workers. The following is information provided by this program. Anyone interested in obtaining more information can contact the Communications Department of the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons at 6300 N. River Rd., Rosemont, IL 60018.

More people see doctors for back pain than for any other medical ailment except colds and upper respiratory complaints. Over six million persons a year see their doctor for this ailment, often because they did not use the proper methods of lifting and moving an object.

Back pain is common not only among laborers and warehouse workers, but also caregivers. Studies show that nurses rank second only to heavy industry workers in the number of persons suffering back pain. If you are caring for an ill or injured family member at home, you are at risk of suffering back pain or injury unless you use the proper methods of lifting and moving the person.

If lifting is part of your job, it is important to do it correctly.

Back Pain is Costly

Most back pain lasts only a few days, but about one in six persons have experienced severe back pain that lasts at least two weeks sometime during their life. The cost of treatment, lost wages, and rehabilitation of all sufferers of back pain is unknown, but it is believed to be enormous. Just the direct costs of insurance-compensated medical bills and payment for lost wages related to low back pain are estimated at more than $11.5 billion a year. Indirect costs of lost production time, training unskilled replacements for disabled workers, administrative costs, etc., are difficult to determine, but significantly increase the total cost.

Back pain caused by lifting can be prevented if you use proper lifting techniques and exercise regularly to improve your muscle strength and overall physical condition. To Lift It Safe:

North Carolina Medical Society, PO Box 27167, Raleigh, NC 27611.

- Plan ahead what you want to do and don't be in a hurry.
- Separate your feet shoulder-width apart to give you a solid base of support.
- Bend at the knees.
- Tighten your stomach muscles.
- Position the person or object close to your body before lifting.
- Lift with your legs.
- Avoid twisting your body; instead, point your toes in the direction you want to move and pivot in that direction.
- Maintain the natural curve of your spine; don't bend at your waist.
- Do not try to lift by yourself an object that is too heavy or an awkward shape. Get help.

Lifting Techniques for Home Caregivers

If you are taking care of a family member at home, you are at greatest risk for back pain when you are:

- pulling a person who is reclining in bed into a sitting position
- transferring a person from a bed to a chair
- leaning over a person for long periods of time

Sitting up in bed

To move a person lying in bed to a wheelchair, put the chair close to the bed and lock the wheels. If the person is not strong enough to push up with his or her hands to a sitting position, place one of your arms under the person's legs and your other arm under his or her back. Move the person's legs over the edge of the bed while pivoting his or her body so the person ends up sitting on the edge of the bed. Keep your feet shoulder-width apart, your knees bent and your back in a natural straight position.

Standing up

If the person, who is sitting, needs assistance getting into a chair, face the patient, spread your feet shoulder-width apart, and bend your knees. Position the person's feet firmly on the floor and slightly apart. The person's hands should be on the bed or armchair or on your shoulders. Place your arms around the person's back and clasp your hands together or use a transfer belt which fits around the person's waist and provides a secure handhold. Hold the person close to you, lean back, and shift your weight as you lift the person to an upright position.

Caring

Caregivers who assist seated or reclining persons for long periods of time should stand with their knees bent and their back in a natural straight position. Don't bend at your waist.

Preventing Back Pain at Work and at Home

When lifting objects at home or at work you need to take precautions that will prevent injury to your back.

- Plan ahead what you want to do and don't be in a hurry. Position yourself close to the object you want to lift. Separate your feet shoulder-width apart to give you a solid base of support. Bend at the knees. Tighten your stomach muscles. Lift with your leg muscles as you stand up. Do not bend at your waist. Don't try to lift by yourself an object that is too heavy or an awkward shape. Get help.

- While you are holding an object, keep your knees slightly bent to maintain your balance. If you have to move the object to one side, avoid twisting your body. Point your toes in the direction you want to move and pivot in that direction. Keep the object close to you when moving.

- If you must place an object on a shelf, move as close as possible to the shelf. Spread your feet in a wide stance, positioning one foot in front of the other, to give you a solid base of support. Do not lean forward and do not fully extend your arms while holding the object in your hands.

- If the shelf is chest high, move close to the shelf and place your feet apart and one foot forward. Lift the object chest high, keep your elbows at your side and position your hands so you can push the object up and on to the shelf. Remember to tighten your stomach muscles before lifting.

Exercise to Lessen Problems with Back Pain

You can minimize problems with back pain with exercises that make the muscles in your back, stomach, hips and thighs strong and flexible. Some people keep in good physical condition by being active in recreational activities like running, walking, bike riding and swimming. In addition to these conditioning activities, there are specific exercises that are directed toward strengthening and stretching your back, stomach, hip and thigh muscles.

Before beginning any exercise program, you should discuss the program with your doctor and follow the doctor's advice. It is important to exercise regularly, every other day. Before exercising you should warm up with slow, rhythmic exercises; if you haven't exercised in some time, you can warm up by walking. Inhale deeply before each repetition of an exercise and exhale when performing each repetition of an exercise.

Exercises to strengthen your muscles

Wall slides to strengthen back, hip and leg muscles.

Stand with your back against a wall and feet shoulder-width apart. Slide down into a crouch with knees bent to about 90 degrees. Count to five and slide back up the wall. Repeat five times.

Leg raises to strengthen back and hip muscles.

Lie on your stomach. Tighten the muscles in one leg and raise it from the floor. Hold your leg up for a count of 10 and return it to the floor. Do the same with the other leg. Repeat five times with each leg.

Leg raises to strengthen stomach and hip muscles.

Lie on your back with your arms at your sides. Lift one leg off the floor. Hold your leg up for a count of 10 and return it to the floor. Do the same with the other leg. Repeat five times with each leg. If that is too difficult, keep one knee bent and the foot flat on the ground while raising the other leg.

Partial sit-ups (crunches) to strengthen stomach muscles.

Lie on your back with knees bent and feet flat on floor. Slowly raise your head and shoulders off the floor and reach with both hands toward your knees. Count to 10. Repeat five times.

Count to 10. Repeat five times.

Back leg swings to strengthen hip and back muscles.

Stand behind a chair with your hands on the back of the chair. Lift one leg back and up while keeping the knee straight. Return slowly. Raise the other leg and return. Repeat five times with each leg.

Exercises to decrease the strain on your back to your chest as possible. Do not raise your head. Do not straighten your legs as you lower them. Start with five repetitions, several times a day.

Lie on your back with your knees bent and feet flat on your bed or floor. Raise your knees toward your chest. Place both hands under your knees and gently pull your knees as close legs to remain flat on the bed or floor. Hold the position for one or two seconds. Repeat 10 times, several times a day.

Lie on your stomach. Place your hands under your shoulders with your elbows bent and push up. Raise the top half of your body as high as possible, allowing your hips and Stand with your feet slightly apart. Place your hands in the small of your back. Keep your knees straight. Bend backwards at the waist as far as possible and hold the position for one or two seconds.

Are You at Risk?

You are most at risk for back pain if:

- your job requires frequent bending and lifting
- you must twist your body when lifting and carrying an object
- you must lift and carry in a hurry
- you are overweight
- you do not exercise regularly or do not engage in recreational activities
- you smoke

How to Prevent Back Pain

- Use the correct lifting and moving techniques. Get help if an object is too heavy or an awkward size.
- Exercise regularly to keep the muscles that support your back strong and flexible.
- Don't slouch; poor posture puts a strain on your lower back.
- Maintain your proper body weight. Being overweight puts a strain on your back muscles.
- Keep a positive attitude about your job and homelife; studies show that persons who are unhappy at work or home tend to have more back problems and take longer to recover than persons who have a positive attitude.

What to Do if You Get Acute Back Pain

Lie down on your back and relax for 20 to 30 minutes. Ice packs help reduce the initial pain and swelling. Most back pain disappears in a few days. Your treatment may begin with a short period of rest in bed. Depending on the source of the back pain, your orthopaedist may suggest medication. Your treatment will eventually involve exercises to prevent recurrence of back pain.

While surgery is uncommon, operative treatment may be recommended for problems that are not responsive to other therapies. ☐

SURGEONS: COULD YOU USE AN EXTRA $9,000?

If you're a resident in surgery, the Army Reserve will pay you a yearly stipend which could total in excess of $9,000 in the Army Reserve's Specialized Training Assistance Program (STRAP).

You will have opportunities to continue your education and attend conferences, and we will be flexible about scheduling the time you serve. Your immediate commitment could be as little as two weeks a year, with a small added obligation later on.

Foreign Body Aspiration in North Carolina Children

Amelia F. Drake, MD, Timothy L. Smith, MD, and Newton D. Fischer, MD

The sound of a child choking creates anxiety in all who realize the potential complications that follow foreign body aspiration. Fortunately, most "choking spells" are self limited, and the foreign body is cleared from the airway by cough and gag reflexes. However, when aspiration occurs despite these defense mechanisms, early diagnosis and prompt treatment of this potentially lethal problem are essential.

We present here a complicated, but successfully managed, case of foreign body aspiration and review the nature of this problem in North Carolina and throughout the world.

Our Patient

A 16-month-old Hispanic boy experienced a "choking episode" while eating candied peanuts. The child was taken to an emergency department and discharged after no evidence was found of airway foreign body. The child's mother returned with him to the emergency department five times because he continued to cough and wheeze. Ten days after the initial event, the child was referred to us.

On physical examination, he was afebrile; respirations were 24/minute and unlabored. On auscultation, mild inspiratory and expiratory upper airway wheezes were heard on the right. Anteroposterior and lateral chest radiographs demonstrated right middle lobe atelectasis (Fig. 1).

He was taken to the operating suite where visualization using the rigid bronchoscope revealed diffuse inflammation and edema of the right mainstem bronchus. Fragments of peanut were removed piecemeal from the right mainstem bronchus and multiple mucous plugs were removed by suctioning. The procedure was technically difficult because of the diffuse inflammatory response initiated by the foreign body. The patient was kept overnight in the pediatric intensive care unit; he developed wheezing which responded to inhaled albuterol. He was discharged to home the following day.

The patient returned, as scheduled, five days later. Chest radiograph revealed persistent right middle lobe atelectasis. The patient was returned to the operating room where rigid bronchoscopy revealed multiple small fragments of peanut in the distal right main bronchioles. These were removed using a combination of rigid and flexible bronchoscopes and foreign body forceps. A few small peanut fragments could be seen in, but not removed from, distal subsegmental bronchi. The patient was again observed overnight and discharged to home.

At the return appointment 10 days later, the patient's mother stated that the child had coughed up at least one small piece of peanut. Chest radiographs were normal.

Fig 1: Chest radiograph demonstrating patchy infiltrate of the right lung secondary to foreign bodies (pieces of peanut) in the right mainstem bronchus.

Discussion

Accidental deaths are one of the great tragedies of childhood, the more so because they often result from preventable causes. One such problem is foreign body aspiration. Fortunately the number of deaths from this cause is small, but the morbidity can be severe, especially when the diagnosis is delayed, as in our case.

Table 1 shows that 52 North Carolina children died from aspiration of food substances and 36 from aspiration of other foreign bodies during the 11-year period, 1980 through 1991. This means an average of 4.7 deaths each year from food aspiration and 3.3 from aspiration of other objects. By way of comparison, from 1980 to 1985, aspiration of food caused only 180 deaths (and aspiration of other items, 144 deaths) in children aged 0 to 14 years¹ throughout the entire U.S. (giving rates for the entire country of 36 and 28.8 deaths per year, respectively). These data suggest a greater problem in North Carolina, which has about 3% of the nation's population but about 12% of the childhood aspiration deaths. One reason may be our large African American population. The death rate for aspiration injuries to African American and Native American children is two or more times higher than the death rate for white children. Childhood mortality in North Carolina is related to socioeconomic class.²

A Distillation of the World's Literature

It is hard to estimate the number of non-fatal aspiration injuries that occur since these are not reported. A review of the literature reveals large series of cases from many medical centers all over the world. All reports show data consistent with the following summary:

- 1) Foreign body aspiration is unusual in children less than six months old.
- 2) Foreign body aspiration has a peak incidence in children aged one to two years.
- 3) Foreign body aspiration decreases remarkably after three years of age.

- 4) More than half of the objects aspirated are food materials (usually nuts or seeds) and more than half of these are peanuts.
- 5) Most foreign bodies lodge in the right main bronchus.
- 6) Boys aspirate 1.2 to 2.0 times more often than girls.
- 7) Often the choking episode is observed; if the child is less than two years old, the episode is often witnessed by a responsible adult.
- 8) About 30% of patients do not obtain care until three or more days after the original episode; 50% of patients who seek care late do so because of parental negligence.
- 9) About 1% to 2% of patients cough up objects spontaneously.
- 10) Some patients have no symptoms, and the classic triad—cough, wheezing, and decreased breath sounds—is not always present.
- 11) Chest x-rays are useful but may be negative. Antero-posterior and lateral films in inspiration and expiration are more helpful than computerized tomographic scans.
- 12) A death rate of 1% to 2% is reported for bronchoscopic removal (under general anesthesia).

The problem of aspiration exists worldwide. We have found reports from England (40 patients),³ from China (400 patients),^{4,14,15} two from Germany (94 patients⁵ and 224 patients⁶), two from the U.S. (143 patients⁷ and 331 patients⁸), from Israel (200 patients),⁹ from Greece (90 patients),¹⁰ from Turkey (500 patients),¹¹ from Canada (202 patients),¹² and from Australia (230 patients).¹³ The papers from China describe in detail the overall data,⁴ radiologic findings,¹⁴ and causes and complications of late diagnosis (greater than three days).¹⁵ The report from Turkey¹¹ details the four types of bronchial obstruction that can occur:

- 1) A check valve—air can be inhaled but not completely expelled.
- 2) A stop valve—complete obstruction.
- 3) A ball valve—the foreign body dislodges during expiration and reimpacts during inspiration.

†Note: The numbers do not always add up because some patients had more than one symptom.

- 4) A by-pass valve—there is partial obstruction of a bronchiole leading to atelectasis.

The report by Pyman from Australia¹³ is especially helpful because it correlates six broad types of clinical presentation with the location of the foreign body in the respiratory tract. Table 2 summarizes the data from that paper.

Our patient's case illustrates the complexity of managing patients with foreign body aspiration. This child made six trips to the emergency room—and two to the operating room—before his problem was resolved. Foreign body aspiration is potentially life-threatening, and the surgical expertise required to remove a distally located foreign body is considerable. Each aspirated foreign body is unique in location, consistency, length of time that it has been present, and amount of surrounding tissue reaction (Fig. 2 shows some of the various objects we have removed from the airways of children over the years).

Although some authors consider foreign body aspiration to be a form of child abuse or neglect,¹⁶ the most urgent thing for a physician caring for a child who has had a "choking" episode is that he or she recognize the sometimes subtle findings, know the potentially disastrous consequences, and arrange or provide the careful evaluation and follow-up that are needed. □

Will the Defendant Please Rise?

Black Widow Spider Poisoning

Ronald B. Mack, MD

When my brother and I were young, our father would regale us with stories about our cousins from his side of the family. We rarely met them, even though we lived in the same big city. Times were bad, money was hard to come by (legally), and people did what they could to survive. Our paternal figure ran a "speakeasy" in a "blind pig" and we did reasonably well considering we lived in an apartment, had no automobile, and prayed that Prohibition would never be repealed. The Volstead Act and the 18th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution became our tickets to "three hot's and a cot" (see Glossary).

Our male cousins, Dad would tell us, were rarely able to buy new suits. When they did he would slyly ask us, "What were the first words they heard when they wore the suits for the first time?" Playing along with our loved one, we would not answer, even though we knew the correct reply. Then Dad would say, "Will the defendant please rise!" as the bailiff of the court would say when the judge prepared to pass sentence on members of our extended family.

And so the clinician-manager must think of the black widow spider in a similar way: as the guilty perpetrator in patients unlucky enough to have been bitten and then suffer acute onset of muscle pain and cramping with board-like rigidity of the abdomen.

The Ubiquitous Arachnid

Spiders are, allegedly, the most numerous, widespread, and varied of all of the animals on earth.¹ (Oh really? I thought lawyers were.) To date, more than 100,000 species have been identified; they can be found on land, in the air, and on and under water—literally anywhere on earth where life prevails. Almost all species of spiders produce a venom, obviously to help them trap, kill, and eat prey, but very few are poisonous to us. The two potentially most dangerous spiders in this country are the Latrodectus species (the black widow and her friend) and the Loxosceles (the brown recluse and its relatives). For a discussion of the brown recluse spider, see my article, "The Bite of the Spider Woman: Loxosceles reclusa [The Brown Recluse]" NC Med J 1992;53:200-3.

Black widow spiders are members of the genus Latrodectus ("robber-biter" or "murderer"). Only the lady form of this genus is dangerous to human beings. Because I am politically correct I will not comment on this gender disparity in wreaking havoc but I can think about it, silently, to myself. These animals are small, eight-legged varmints, divided into two parts: a cephalothorax and a large bag-like abdomen. The chelicera (a.k.a. fangs) can be readily apparent or too small to be seen. They spend their entire lives trapping and eating flies, mosquitoes, and various other insects. The mature lady black widow can be quite attractive with a glossy black, gray, or brown color complete with a red, orange, or yellow hourglass marking on the ventral surface of the abdomen (the tummy, dummy!).² It is about the size of a quarter, i.e. 1 to 1-1/2 inches long, when the legs are extended. The "prepubertal," as it were, immature female black widow spiders have red, brown, or cream markings on their dorsal and cream-colored hourglass markings on their ventral surfaces. As with very young girls everywhere, their bites are not dangerous.

In order to be able to spend their entire existence catching and eating bugs, black widows exert a fair amount of energy constructing webs to catch their prey (Remember, it's "Won't you come into my parlor?" said the spider to the fly, not "What is your sign?" "Haven't we met before?" or "What's a pretty fly like you doing in a dump like this?"). Black widows like to hang out in warm dry areas, dimly lit and surrounded by flies. Out-houses were at one time the classic location where black widow spiders could bite and yell, "Gotcha!" particularly if they attacked a male and his netherparts (for this the spider could earn points for the Arachnid Hall of Infamy). The outdoor privy has largely disappeared, of course, except in our part of the continental U.S.

Now these shy, allegedly non-violent critters spin their webs in trash dumps, hollow tree stumps, under wood piles, in stone walls and garages, in barns and stables, as well as indoors in storage sheds, closets, basements, clothes boxes, and trunks. The webs are typically irregular, located in corners and generally undisturbed areas.

You can find Latrodectus species all over the world but they are most prevalent in tropical climes. They can be found throughout most of the U.S. but are most common in the southwestern and southeastern states and in California.³ There are more than 20 species although the clinical adversities they produce are quite similar. In the U.S. there are only five species of Latrodectus; remember only the females are dangerous to people.

Black Widow Bites

Black widow spider bites are the leading cause of death from arthropod envenomations in the U.S. Most fatalities occur in very young children and senior citizens. The morbidity and mortality result from systemic envenomation. On a volume-per-volume basis, the neurotoxic venom of Latrodectus mactans is more potent than that of pit vipers such as a cottonmouth or rattlesnake.^{4,6} Fortunately, the spider's venom glands, located in its cephalothorax, contain less than 0.2 mg of venom. These glands have walls composed of striated muscle that control the delivery of venom. Mean lethal doses, in humans, range from .005 to 1.0 mg/kg.⁴ The venom adversely affects the motor end-plates of neuromuscular synaptic membranes by binding gangliosides and glycoproteins at the synapses.⁵ This binding keeps the channels for sodium influx open regardless of normal action potential properties. There is a pathophysiological release of acetylcholine and norepinephrine into the synapse and inhibition of re-uptake. All of this biochemical interplay results in excessive stimulation of the motor end-plate. The really bad actor in this spider's venom is a peptide known as d-latrotoxin, which is responsible for the systemic effects of this type of spider bite.¹

The clinical effects resulting from a black widow spider bite can be divided into local and systemic. The most immediate effect may be a sensation of pinprick or pinching, but there may be no initial painful sensation. If pain does occur, it usually subsides in a matter of minutes and is replaced by a dull ache or sensation of numbness that appears 20 to 40 minutes later, accompanied by swelling, erythema, and pruritus.³ Inspection of the area involved may reveal two red puncture marks flanked by an area of blanching. This is surrounded by an outer blue-red border, referred to as a "target" or "halo" lesion.⁸ The puncture marks are 1 to 2 mm apart. Most bites occur on the distal extremities, buttocks, or genital areas.⁴ Black widow venom does not produce tissue necrosis as does that from Loxosceles (brown recluse) spiders.

The worrisome effects of a black widow spider bite to the patient and the doctor are the systemic manifestations. The clinical adversities that can ensue from a small amount of this potent toxin include muscle cramping, tachycardia, hypertension, local or generalized diaphoresis, salivation, lacrimation, and bronchorrhea.² These cholinergic effects can mimic organophosphate or carbamate insecticide poisoning. Here is where a very careful history can lead you down the correct diagnostic path.

The unfortunate victim of a black widow attack can experience severe pain and spasms of large muscle groups that typically begin as early as 30 to 60 minutes after the bite. This discomfort peaks in one to six hours, although other symptoms may continue to increase for 24 hours. The pain itself can persist for several days. The classical board-like rigidity of the abdomen that is often seen is more often associated with bites on the lower extremities. This scary abdominal rigidity can be very confusing, especially if the history of a bite is not evident, since it may suggest other kinds of catastrophe such as acute appendicitis, peritonitis, renal colic, tetanus, etc.

Bites on the upper extremities can produce chest tightness and pain upon inspiration resulting in respiratory distress. Other peculiar signs and symptoms that can result from a black widow spider bite include severe back pain, muscle fibrillations, trismus, extremity weakness, anxiety, restlessness, hyperactivity, and uncoordinated reflexes. A most bizarre triad seen in some unfortunate victims consists of a flushed face, distorted grimacing, and blepharo-conjunctivitis.^{2,9}

In a fairly recent report of acute Latrodectus attacks the most common presenting complaints were pain at the bite site, abdominal pain associated with cramping, and lower extremity pain and weakness.⁸ On physical examination, the most frequent signs were bite site lesions, abdominal tenderness, and rigidity. In the very severely envenomated patient there may be headache, fever, nausea, vomiting, seizure, shock, and paralysis. From a prognostic point of view death occurs in less than 1% of patients, usually the very young or the elderly or otherwise previously debilitated patients.⁸ Death probably is the result of cardiac or respiratory failure.

Other than a good history, there are, of course, no diagnostic tools to help with the diagnosis of a black widow bite. Tests should be ordered only to rule out other disorders that mimic this spider bite. It may be difficult to get a good history from very young victims who are preverbal. It is unfortunate that you cannot ask the malefactor herself, the lady spider.

There should be some reason why this female arthropod has earned her common appellation—the black widow. Only rarely does the female consume her mate after copulation. She eats him only if she can catch him. If he stays to have a cigarette he is doomed. If, on the other hand, he takes advantage of her slightly befuddled post-coital state and makes a quick exit, he will probably be safe. No after-glow for you dude. Run for your life, you eight-legged wimp. Go eat a fly!

Treating the Bite

Treatment of a black-widow spider bite is not ideal and remains controversial. It is usual and customary to use muscle relaxants, such as methocarbamol and benzodiazepines, 10% calcium gluconate given intravenously and, in some patients, specific antivenin.⁴ Because the primarily pathophysiologic aberration following an envenomation is motor end-plate stimulation and muscle rigidity, it is no surprise that the use of muscle relaxants is a time-honored recommendation. Some authorities recommend opioids such as morphine or meperidine, either alone or with benzodiazepines to relieve muscle pain and cramping. The use of calcium gluconate^{2,4} has many champions and, although the exact mechanism of action is unknown, some believe that it replenishes calcium stores in the sarcoplasmic reticulum of muscles which have been depleted of calcium by the repetitive neuromuscular stimulation.

Much of the controversy in the treatment of black widow spider bite centers around whether to use antivenin or not.⁴ The antivenin is prepared from the serum of horses immunized against Latrodectus venom. It probably acts by binding the venom, preventing the toxin from interfering with normal synaptic membrane function. Of course, you must give the patient a skin test before using this product. Serum sickness, anaphylaxis, and death are possibilities if the patient is sensitized to horse serum.

The great majority of Latrodectus envenomations are self-limited and respond to symptomatic treatment. Antivenin should probably be reserved only for patients at risk of death because there is a 9% incidence of anaphylactic reactions in patients with negative skin tests, an 80% incidence in patients with positive skin tests, and as high as a 36% risk of serum sickness.¹¹ The very young and the very old may be at least considered as candidates for antivenin if their condition warrants. A final caution: avoid the use of antivenin in patients receiving a beta-blocker; it increases their risk of anaphylaxis.

A recent review by Clark, et al¹² evaluated therapy in 163 patients who had a black widow spider bite with positive identification of the spider or a visible envenomation site ("target lesion"). The investigators' conclusions are interesting: Calcium gluconate was inferior to a parenteral opioid-benzodiazepine combination in relieving pain in significant envenomations. Furthermore, they suggest antivenin is more effective than calcium gluconate in relieving pain after serious envenomation. They were not impressed that calcium gluconate offered symptomatic pain relief. The authors favored intravenous morphine and benzodiazepines to achieve freedom from pain in a great majority of their patients.

Déjà Vu All Over Again?

And on the subject of drugs, one hears rumblings these days, however faint, that the "street" variety should be "legalized." Supporters say that this would eliminate the criminal purveyors by getting rid of the profit motive. Opponents point to data that show that legalizing alcohol (a far greater disaster in terms of death and disease than narcotics or cocaine) may have been a big mistake for our country. Golly, could there be a backlash? Could Prohibition return? Could my beloved father come back for just one day to see history repeat? He would be so pleased, so nostalgic, so willing to repeat his version of the St. Valentine's Day Massacre. It could be déjà vu all over again. □

A GREAT WAY TO SERVE

The Journal's Reviewers: The Ties That Bind

It is possible (and I think advantageous) to think of the North Carolina Medical Society as the community of practicing physicians. Nowadays the notion of medicine as a learned profession is in some disarray. Economic and political forces gnaw at our roots. So it is no surprise that I am increasingly fond of the idea that the Society binds us in a common, even if highly individualized and sometimes very specialized, endeavor—the care of patients.

I see the Journal as a kind of moral glue that cements the sense of community I think is so important. Being a member of the Society and a reader of the Journal can span the gamut of a medical lifetime, from student to mature practitioner to retiree. The Journal's pages are open to all North Carolina doctors, and I am enormously pleased at the large number who take advantage of that openness. Writing to or for the Journal forges community among those engaged in our common professional and moral enterprise.

Most readers of the Journal do not see the work done by those members who review submitted papers. The names of those who have reviewed papers (some more than once) during the past two years is appended. I thank them for helping me, the editor and you, the reader, but most of all for their support of our common goals. I invite all of you to join us in this task—send me your name! You need not be a subject expert (although that can be helpful at times); you just need to want to be a structural part of the society of medical practitioners.

Mary Frances Shuford, MD

One North Carolina Physician Who Made a Difference

By Will Durham

Mary Frances Shuford, MD, of Asheville, was an early and determined advocate of the poor. She devoted her medical career to caring for the impoverished people of her community, many of whom were black. Dr. Shuford devised a prepaid system to help support her charitable service, and she forced the medical establishment to confront its lack of care for the underserved and to develop a solution. The result of her efforts was the establishment of a hospital to serve the black community of Asheville.

—John H. Russell, MD,
President/Chairman,
Buncombe County
Medical Society, Asheville

Segregated hospitals were standard in the South prior to World War II. Few hospitals served black patients, but these provided the only post-graduate training available to black physicians and nurses and virtually all the hospital care for the black community. Black physicians "believed that separate institutions were necessary because integration was a slow process, and advancement of the race could not afford to wait for its eventual development." Typically, hospitals serving the black community were small, poorly equipped, and financially limited. As a result, many did not survive the Depression or fell victim to stringent accreditation criteria. The situation worsened during World War II because much of the philanthropy that had sustained black facilities was redirected to the war effort. This was a deplorable time for black health care, but there were moments of inspiration such as the efforts of one white woman who successfully established the "Asheville Colored Hospital."

Dr. Mary Frances Shuford

"Polly" Shuford was born in 1897, the second child of Judge George Shuford and his wife Julia, who managed the family's boarding house at 50 Orange Street in Asheville. She graduated from Shorter College, received a Master's Degree in Bacteriology at Columbia University, and then went to work for the Biltmore Dairy Farms monitoring the contents of milk trucks for spoilage. This brought her in to contact with local physicians and eventually led to her enrollment in Rush Medical School in Chicago, where she earned her M.D. She returned to Asheville and began general practice in 1934.

Because women practitioners were uncommon and because it was unusual at the time to seek medical care from a woman, Dr. Shuford's practice grew slowly. She developed a concern for the inadequacy of black health care as a result of the premature death of a family cook.² Consequently, by 1938, half of her practice was devoted to medical care for black patients, largely on a non-fee basis.² Still, Dr. Shuford did not believe charity care promoted responsible behavior, and she could not continue her practice without a steady income. She asked the Buncombe County Medical Society to support a group medical plan for area blacks. The Medical Society refused the request, stating that this was a problem that involved the entire community and therefore should be handled by city officials.²

Undeterred, Dr. Shuford developed, on her own, "The Negro Health Security Company." Members of the black community paid 25 cents a week to the program, which allowed them to save enough money to cover the costs of future illness or to repay the debts of previous medical care.² This represented 4% of the $6 per week income of the black domestic.² Twice a week Dr. Shuford conducted clinics for Company members in the old Shuford boarding house. Dr. Shuford, assisted by one white and one black nurse, provided two patient beds, a dispensary, and a minor operating room where she would line up patients for Asheville surgeons. There were no bills or collectors and the Company fund covered a full 85% of her expenses.²

The Inequity of Health Care

In 1940 the population of Asheville was 52,000, of whom 15,000 were black.³ There were five hospitals with a total of 400 beds, but only 18 beds in one hospital were open to black patients.² The ratio of one bed for every 800 black citizens was extreme since the state average was one bed per 180.⁴ Black patients waited months for major surgery and there were no black maternity beds. These inequities resulted in a severe disparity in medical care and in maternal and infant mortality as noted in Table 1.

In his presidential address to the Buncombe County Medical Society in January 1941,⁵ Dr. Arthur Ambler stressed that Asheville's blacks needed additional hospital beds. For the first time, Asheville physicians officially acknowledged the need to provide improved medical care to the black community. In March 1941, a Committee on Hospitalization asked the Buncombe County Medical Society to petition city and county authorities to build and maintain a black hospital of 60 beds.⁶

The funds for such a project were difficult to come

by. Area hospitals were unable to provide additional beds because of their own financial problems, and the federal government relied primarily on philanthropy and the emerging private insurance system, rather than providing direct aid to private hospitals. Third-party payment plans were not widely available and were not sold to blacks who had limited access to hospital beds anyway.⁷ But private philanthropy did provide limited hope. The Duke Endowment, formed in 1924, maintained a hospital section that helped defray the operating costs and capital expenses of non-profit hospitals in North Carolina and South Carolina.¹ Its support for black hospitals stemmed from the Duke family's interest in Lincoln Hospital, founded in Durham in 1901 to show appreciation for the loyalty of slaves during the Civil War.¹ The Duke Endowment and the Chicago-based Rosenwald Fund, recognizing that improvement in public health required the provision of hospital facilities for both black and white citizens, underwrote projects at five black hospitals in North Carolina—New Bern, Durham, Raleigh, Greensboro, and Charlotte.¹

The Shuford Clinic

Dr. Shuford felt that Asheville needed better facilities immediately and couldn't wait for proper funding. In May 1941, she leased an eight-room house at 269 College Street on the edge of the black district. The "Shuford Clinic" was authorized under the certificate of incorporation to do charitable, semi-paid, or paid work.¹ The clinic facilities consisted of an operating room, nurses' quarters, a kitchen, offices, and nine hospital beds.⁸ In the first year, surgeons performed 200 operations, including 77 tonsillectomies, and there were nearly 2,100 outpatient visits.⁸ In addition, Dr. Shuford provided health education on simple nursing, infant care, and recognition of infectious disease.⁸

Asheville's black churches gathered linens, dishes, and necessary items for the clinic.⁹ Other local churches donated equipment, magazines, and baby clothing.¹ Paradoxically, it was soon evident that, because of the increased patient load, even more new facilities were needed. There were still only 30 beds available for black patients in the entire city!¹⁰

In February 1942, Dr. Shuford asked the county Medical Society to endorse and approve the clinic. The Society declined, stating that the "standardization of hospitals is not a function of the society and therefore [it is] not the proper organization to approve or disapprove of Dr. Shuford's clinic."¹¹ The Society did form a committee, however, chaired by Dr. Paul Ringer, to further study the issue. Two months later the Medical Society endorsed the purpose and activities of the clinic. Nevertheless, it was clear that the clinic did not fulfill the need for an adequate number of hospital beds for the black community. Consequently, Dr. Shuford, members of the black community, and the Buncombe County Medical Society mounted a campaign to establish a fully equipped hospital for black patients. Encouraged by Dr. Ringer and Dr. Shuford, the citizens of Asheville finally recognized the severity of the problem; in September 1942 a fundraising drive began for the establishment of the Asheville Colored Hospital.

Donations by churches and individuals spurred fundraising efforts. Then, in December 1942, Charles A. Webb, president of the Citizen-Times Company, initiated a fund drive to raise $12,000, of which $8,000 would be used to secure a suitable building and $4,000 used for renovations and equipment.¹² The funds collected far exceeded the goal: $22,118 was raised in the month-long campaign. The response from local charity was impressive considering Asheville's preoccupation with the war effort. Donations came from individuals, civic groups, and most notably from the black community itself. The "Colored Committee," headed by Rev. E.W. Dixon, raised just over $2,500, largely through churches and schools.¹³ The Asheville Colored Hospital Board was selected in January 1943 to purchase a building, pay for renovations, and begin operation.

The Asheville Colored Hospital

The new hospital, accommodating 35 patients, opened on Saturday, October 23, 1943.¹⁴ For the first time, all seven black physicians in Asheville had hospital privileges. An open house held the preceding Thursday gave donors and beneficiaries from both black and white communities an opportunity to inspect the facilities.¹⁵ The state chartered the hospital, and the Buncombe County Medical Society served as sponsor.¹⁶ The Duke Endowment contributed $1 a day toward the care of each charity case¹⁶ at a time when typical costs included $2.50 per day for room and board; $6.00 for delivery room fee, and $1 to $3 for laboratory work.⁵

In 1948, a two-story addition was built at a cost of $10,000.⁹ Still, the hospital was overcrowded since it was the only institution serving the black population of western North Carolina. Accordingly, in April 1948, the Colored Hospital Board appointed Mr. Webb, Dr. Robert Hendrick, and Mrs. Gibson Packer to explore a possible merger with Memorial Mission Hospital.⁹ The board of the Colored Hospital offered to transfer all of its property and assets if Mission would agree to provide hospitalization for the black population of western North Carolina.⁹ The Board deferred plans to enlarge the Colored Hospital, awaiting Mission's decision.⁹ On January 10, 1951, patients were transferred to the Victoria unit of Memorial Mission Hospital; the Asheville Colored Hospital ceased to exist and its building was sold to the Jesse Ray Funeral Home for $22,500.⁹

The Legacy of Dr. Shuford

Dr. Shuford died in 1983 at the age of 86. Last year, the Buncombe County Medical Society established an award in her honor (right) which was given to James W. Turpin, MD, an Asheville occupational medicine physician.

Dr. Shuford's efforts hastened the arrival of more equitable health care for Asheville's black population. After World War II, the South's small private hospitals, like the four in Asheville, began to follow the lead of big city charity hospitals regarding integration. Memorial Mission Hospital's merger with the previously established Asheville Colored Hospital eased Mission's transformation into a multiracial health care center. This might not have been possible without Mary Frances Shuford, who possessed the revolutionary thinking and unique community spirit that opened Asheville's eyes to its previous neglect of the black community. □

Sekh-Met

Dennis A. Greene, MD

A visit to the North Carolina Museum of Art in Raleigh can be full of discoveries for physicians and allied health personnel. The Egyptian lion-headed goddess Sekh-met is a good example. I became intrigued by the 3,500-year-old bust—which appears on the Journal's cover—during my docent training at the Museum. Although Sekh-met is described as a goddess of war, I discovered that she also became associated with healing and healers. The story of Sekh-met provides us with the opportunity to integrate art, history, and mythology, and to strengthen our knowledge of the roots of our unique profession.

The Birth of Egypt

Nearly 5,000 years ago, according to legend, King Menes moved all his palace retinue from Upper Egypt, near the city of Abydos, north along the Nile River into Lower Egypt. There he and his subjects founded the beautiful white-walled city of Memphis and established the first capital of a united Egyptian nation. That voyage of more than 300 miles, with the king and his court and his retainers and armies moving by foot, sail, and oar, must have been a grand spectacle! Menes, also known as Narmer, is to our understanding perhaps more a mythical rather than an historic figure. Nevertheless, he is credited with founding the First Dynasty, which lasted from 3100 B.C. to roughly 2890 B.C. His 50-year reign consolidated Egypt for the first time. The town of Mit-Rahina, near Cairo, now occupies the site that became and remained the center of dynastic power on the Nile for more than 1,200 years.

The fusion of Upper and Lower Egypt brought together many of the important gods and goddesses who were believed to influence every aspect of life in the conservative agricultural society that arose along the Nile Valley. Divine powers were ascribed by the Egyptian people to insects, reptiles, birds, fish, and domestic and wild animals. Some were supposed to have human physical characteristics (bodies, arms, heads), to have human children, and on occasion to assume different forms. To these deities were attributed special responsibilities and powers over both the living and the dead.

Lions and the Lion Goddess

Lions were one of the great hazards of everyday life in the Nile Valley, especially in Upper Egypt (now Sudan), where they were most numerous. Water was scarce, and waterholes and irrigated land used for cattle grazing attracted these large predators who threatened the cattle herds and the farmers and their families themselves. The lion figure appears often in Egyptian mythology, probably because much prayer or appeasement was thought necessary to keep these beasts from terrorizing areas of human habitation at the edge of the desert.

Not surprisingly, the lion figure became a central pillar of the Memphite Doctrine or cosmogony, a system of beliefs that persisted until about 1991 B.C. In Memphis during the first 10 dynasties religious beliefs centered around the so-called Memphian Triad consisting of the god Ptah (the supreme creator), his son Nefertem and his wife, and the lion-headed goddess Sekh-met.

Sekh-met, the Powerful One, was the war goddess. She devoured her enemies and those of the king (who was also the earthly embodiment of the Creator). She was usually portrayed as an idealized female figure with the head of a lion. Throughout Egyptian history she has been represented in wood, ivory, and stone, standing or sitting, and usually holding a lotus scepter.

The Goddess of Healing

Sekh-met was not only a voracious and terrifying deity but also, paradoxically, the first of the Egyptian pantheon to be identified with healing. She was invoked to frighten away the evil spirits that were believed to cause all disease and pestilence. Rituals of appeasement to Sekh-met arose, in which she was asked to remove the recurring epidemics that were inflicted on the ancient Egyptians, to protect women during pregnancy, and to cure a variety of ailments.

These rituals became institutionalized with the formation of the Priests of Sekh-met, who were the earliest "organized" medical association. We may not think that the incantations and incense-burning offered by the priests provided much direct benefit to the sick and the lame, but first aid and care of wounds suffered in daily activities and in warfare certainly might have (and must have kept the priests busy). Eventually, lay practitioners and surgeons learned the healing arts, and they and the priests recorded their techniques and treatments for those that would follow after them. The famous Smith and Ebers papyri describe a detailed system of medical and surgical practices that date from the earliest periods of Egyptian history.

Imhotep, First Physician

During the Third Dynasty (2686 B.C.-2613 B.C.) King Djoser enlisted as his chief architect and vizier a most remarkable man, known to us as Imhotep. His myriad talents allowed him to design and supervise construction of the first pyramid, the Step-Pyramid at Sakkara, near Giza (the site where the Great Pyramids were later built). These Pyramids represent the first known group of buildings constructed solely from stone. Besides being given great administrative powers throughout the kingdom, Imhotep served as sage, mystic, scribe, and physician. This wise man is known to students of medicine as the earliest named physician in recorded history.

Imhotep developed a great reputation as a healer and was actually deified not long after his death. The pharaohs were traditionally given god status as the earthly embodiments of Osiris, the great god of the underworld and after-life. However, on rare occasions an Egyptian commoner could also be deified because of his or her great works. Imhotep's actual parentage is not known, but myth identifies him as no less than a son of our Sekh-met and Ptah! Temples in honor of Imhotep were erected at Sakkara, Karnak, and several other sites, and pilgrims came to these temples from all over Egypt to worship him. The temples functioned like sanatoria and were famous for their miraculous cures. In addition, they probably contained the first medical libraries.

The Eclipse of Sekh-met

The Egyptian capital was transferred to Thebes (Luxor) in 2134 B.C. and remained there for another 900 years. In Thebes, Sekh-met maintained her exalted position and her cult and priesthood persisted. In nearby Karnak there are hundreds of statues to her, placed by Amenhotep III, perhaps to protect the temples of other gods and goddesses that share that same site to this day.

Lion-headed goddesses antedate Egyptian history, but they did not survive it. The Babylonian war goddess Lamashtu has been identified in carvings dating from 3500 B.C., but no healing qualities were ascribed to her. Possibly it was cultural diffusion that caused a similar appearance among the peoples of the Nile Valley. In any case devotions to Sekh-met flourished during the Egyptian dynasties but, after the Greeks won control of Egypt, little further was heard of Sekh-met. However, Imhotep was absorbed into the Greek myth of Asklepios, another great healer who also was deified, presumably after being struck down by a lightning bolt from a jealous Zeus, who feared that Asklepios would learn how to revive the dead and make them immortal.

Should we not accord Sekh-met, lion-headed goddess of healing, patroness of the Priests of Sekh-met, and "mother" of Imhotep the Physician, a prominent place in Medicine's halls of honor? When you pass her noble visage, stop and think a bit about how far we have come, and perhaps give her a nod. □

Overall the tone of the insert is extremely pessimistic, and that may very well be the case in the established and longstanding Alzheimer patient. I do think, however, that a communication from the North Carolina Medical Society to our patients could have been more useful clinically in citing glimmers of hope in an otherwise bleak horizon.

From the Editor:

The Health Watch section is generated at Society headquarters and is bound into the Journal at press. The ADRDA provided information on Alzheimer's disease for the January edition. We have forwarded Dr. Kushner's letter to the NCMS Communications Department.

50th Reunion Plans

To the Editor:

I am interested in planning a 50th anniversary reunion of Corps Evacuation Hospital #2 in August or September.

CEH#2 was organized on August 1, 1944, at Camp Lejeune, North Carolina. It disbanded in November 1945; some members joined other units in China and others returned to the U.S. in time for Christmas 1945. I was a member of the CEH#2 neurosurgical team, headed by Dr. William T. Spence. A number of CEH#2 operating teams also served with the 98th Army Field Hospital on Okinawa.

If any of your readers would like to participate in a reunion, I'd like to hear from them.

ASSOCIATE DEAN FOR RURAL

PRACTICE: East Carolina University School of Medicine seeks a physician with significant administrative experience in clinical practice development, outreach coordination, and physician networks to administer and coordinate physician and clinical outreach activities for the School of Medicine in the areas served by our medical center. The successful candidate will assist with development of physician networks. Interested individuals should forward curriculum vitae to James A. Hallock, MD, Vice Chancellor for Health Sciences, Dean, School of Medicine, East Carolina University, School of Medicine, Greenville, NC 27858-4354. East Carolina University is an equal opportunity, affirmative action employer.

CAROLINA!: Have you ever considered moving to beautiful Charlotte, North Carolina? Our practice is growing, dynamic, and focused on developing programs to meet the medical needs of the 90s. Our practice emphasizes general neurology, inpatient general medical rehabilitation and neurorehabilitation, and comprehensive pain management. We are in need of an energetic, motivated, and creative neurologist who enjoys hard work, feels compassion for his or her patients, and strives always to maintain the highest level of professional service. Send your CV to Ronald C. Demas, MD, 2219 E. 7th St., Charlotte, NC 28204. We look forward to hearing from you.

NAGS HEAD, NC: Physician sought for Urgent Care Center in Nags Head, North Carolina. Excellent practice in a stable coastal community. Position requires an energetic and personable individual with an interest in primary care. Some Emergency Medicine experience is necessary. Competitive salary and benefit package. Part-time positions available between May and September with accommodations provided. Call Dr. Mitch Jenkins at 919/441-0502 or Dr. David Pitrolo at 804/547-8419.

NORTH CAROLINA: A diversified, expanding Occupational Medical/Industrial Hygiene practice is looking for an energetic physician to staff a clinic with established clientele. Good clinical skills essential. Experience very helpful. Occupational or family medicine boards/eligibility a plus, but not essential. Experience or a strong interest in musculoskeletal problems a definite plus. Salary would be competitive with excellent chance for advancement. Send CV to Code #25, North Carolina Medical Journal, Box 3910, DUMC, Durham, NC 27710.

NORTH CAROLINA STATE UNIVERSITY: Student Health Service desires BC/BE physician in FP, IM, or PED. Attractive benefits (CME, malpractice, retirement, health insurance, 26 days annual leave, etc.). Student Health has eight physicians, four NPs, lab/x-ray, and pharmacy. Send letter of interest, CV, name, address, and phone number for three references to Administrative Director, Student Health Service, NCSU, Box 7304, Raleigh, NC 27695.

OXFORD: Need FP to replace retiring partner, one weekday off/week. Two out of three weekends off. Call for details. E.D. Day, MD, 919/693-8126 (days), 919/693-1715 (nights and weekends).

PENALTY-FREE WITHDRAWALS:

Access qualified retirement accounts (401K, 403B, SEP, Keogh, IRA) prior to age 59 1/2 without triggering 10% IRS penalty. Inquiries: L.F. Siegel, CLU, ChFC, Pension Distribution Associates, P.O. Box 51771, Durham, NC 27717. 919/493-1782.

POSITION AVAILABLE, NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE:

Aphorisms of the Month

Daniel J. Sexton, M.D., Editor

Surgeons

"...it is impossible to be a good surgeon if one is not familiar with the foundations and generalizations of medicine. On the other hand,...it is impossible for anyone to be a good physician who is absolutely ignorant of the art of surgery, with a knowledge of its possibilities and its limitations. —Henri de Mondeville

In surgery, eyes first and most; fingers next and little; tongue last and least. —Sir George Murray Humphry

Any fool can cut off a leg—it takes a surgeon to save one. —George G. Ross

In internal medicine physicians have dwelt too much on dogmas, opinions, and speculations; and too often their errors passed undiscovered to the grave. The surgeon, for his good, has had a sharper training on facts; his errors hit him promptly in the face. —Sir Clifford Allbutt

The surgeon is often intolerant and the internist self-sufficient. —William J. Mayo

The surgeon who is his own physician, though he often has a fool for a colleague, has the happiness of working in an atmosphere of mutual confidence and admiration. —Sir Heneage Ogilvie

A good surgeon is a good medical man who can cut. —Martin H. Fischer

It can be reasonably supposed that the average person, if asked to define the difference between a physician and a surgeon, would reply "a surgeon uses the knife while the physician prescribes medicines," but the real distinction is that the physician and the surgeon belong to entirely different schools of medical thought. The good physician is a disciple of Paracelsus, who was a sceptic, while the good surgeon is a disciple of Galen, who was a good dogmatist. —Charles Brook

Zantac[®] 300 (ranitidine hydrochloride) Tablets

BRIEF SUMMARY

The following is a brief summary only. Before prescribing, see complete prescribing information in Zantac[®] product labeling.

INDICATIONS AND USAGE: Zantac[®] is indicated in: 1. Short-term treatment of active duodenal ulcer. 2. Maintenance therapy for duodenal ulcer patients at reduced dosage after healing of acute ulcers. 3. The treatment of pathological hypersecretory conditions (e.g., Zollinger-Ellison syndrome and systemic mastocytosis). 4. Short-term treatment of active, benign gastric ulcer. 5. Treatment of gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD). 6. Treatment of endoscopically diagnosed erosive esophagitis.

Concomitant antacids should be given as needed for pain relief to patients with active duodenal ulcer, active, benign gastric ulcer, hypersecretory states, GERD, and erosive esophagitis.

CONTRAINDICATIONS: Zantac[®] is contraindicated for patients known to have hypersensitivity to the drug or any of the ingredients.

PRECAUTIONS: General: 1. Symptomatic response to Zantac[®] therapy does not preclude the presence of gastric malignancy.

2. Since Zantac is excreted primarily by the kidney, dosage should be adjusted in patients with impaired renal function (see DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION). Caution should be observed in patients with hepatic dysfunction since Zantac is metabolized in the liver.

3. Rare reports suggest that Zantac may precipitate acute porphyric attacks in patients with acute porphyria. Zantac should therefore be avoided in patients with a history of acute porphyria.

Laboratory Tests: False-positive tests for urine protein with Multistix[®] may occur during Zantac therapy, and therefore testing with sulfosalicylic acid is recommended.

Drug Interactions: Although Zantac has been reported to bind weakly to cytochrome P-450 in vitro, recommended doses of the drug do not inhibit the action of the cytochrome P-450-linked oxygenase enzymes in the liver. However, there have been isolated reports of drug interactions that suggest that Zantac may affect the bioavailability of certain drugs by some mechanism as yet unidentified (e.g., a pH-dependent effect on absorption or a change in volume of distribution).

Increased or decreased prothrombin times have been reported during concurrent use of ranitidine and warfarin. However, in human pharmacokinetic studies with dosages of ranitidine up to 400 mg per day, no interaction occurred, ranitidine had no effect on warfarin clearance or prothrombin time. The possibility of an interaction with warfarin at dosages of ranitidine higher than 400 mg per day has not been investigated.

Carcinogenesis, Mutagenesis, Impairment of Fertility: There was no indication of tumorigenic or carcinogenic effects in life-span studies in mice and rats at dosages up to 2,000 mg/kg per day.

Ranitidine was not mutagenic in standard bacterial tests (Salmonella, Escherichia coli) for mutagenicity at concentrations up to the maximum recommended for these assays.

In a dominant lethal assay, a single oral dose of 1,000 mg/kg to male rats was without effect on the outcome of two matings per week for the next 9 weeks.

Pregnancy: Teratogenic Effects: Pregnancy Category B: Reproduction studies have been performed in rats and rabbits at doses up to 160 times the human dose and have revealed no evidence of impaired fertility or harm to the fetus due to Zantac. There are, however, no adequate and well-controlled studies in pregnant women. Because animal reproduction studies are not always predictive of human response, this drug should be used during pregnancy only if clearly needed.

Nursing Mothers: Zantac is secreted in human milk. Caution should be exercised when Zantac is administered to a nursing mother.

Pediatric Use: Safety and effectiveness in children have not been established.

Use in Elderly Patients: Ulcer healing rates in elderly patients (65-82 years of age) were no different from those in younger age-groups. The incidence rates for adverse events and laboratory abnormalities were also not different from those seen in other age-groups.

ADVERSE REACTIONS: The following have been reported as events in clinical trials or in the routine management of patients treated with Zantac[®]. The relationship to Zantac therapy has been unclear in many cases. Headache, sometimes severe, seems to be related to Zantac administration.

Central Nervous System: Rarely, malaise, dizziness, somnolence, insomnia, and vertigo. Rare cases of reversible mental confusion, agitation, depression, and hallucinations have been reported, predominantly in severely ill elderly patients. Rare cases of reversible blurred vision suggestive of a change in accommodation have been reported. Rare reports of reversible involuntary motor disturbances have been received.

Hepatic: In normal volunteers, SGPT values were increased to at least twice the pretreatment levels in 6 of 12 subjects receiving 100 mg q.i.d. intravenously for 7 days, and in 4 of 24 subjects receiving 50 mg q.i.d. intravenously for 5 days. There have been occasional reports of hepatitis, hepatocellular or hepatocanalicular or mixed, with or without jaundice. In such circumstances, ranitidine should be immediately discontinued. These events are usually reversible, but in exceedingly rare circumstances death has occurred.

Musculoskeletal: Rare reports of arthralgias and myalgias.

Hematologic: Blood count changes (leukopenia, granulocytopenia, and thrombocytopenia) have occurred in a few patients. These were usually reversible. Rare cases of agranulocytosis, pancytopenia, sometimes with marrow hypoplasia, and aplastic anemia and exceedingly rare cases of acquired immune hemolytic anemia have been reported.

Endocrine: Controlled studies in animals and man have shown no stimulation of any pituitary hormone by Zantac and no antiandrogenic activity, and cimetidine-induced gynecomastia and impotence in hypersecretory patients have resolved when Zantac has been substituted. However, occasional cases of gynecomastia, impotence, and loss of libido have been reported in male patients receiving Zantac, but the incidence did not differ from that in the general population.

Other: Rare cases of hypersensitivity reactions (e.g., bronchospasm, fever, rash, eosinophilia), anaphylaxis, angioneurotic edema, and small increases in serum creatinine.

OVERDOSAGE: There has been limited experience with overdosage. Reported acute ingestions of up to 18 g orally have been associated with transient adverse effects similar to those encountered in normal clinical experience (see ADVERSE REACTIONS). In addition, abnormalities of gait and hypotension have been reported.

When overdosage occurs, the usual measures to remove unabsorbed material from the gastrointestinal tract, clinical monitoring, and supportive therapy should be employed.

Studies in dogs receiving dosages of Zantac[®] in excess of 225 mg/kg per day have shown muscular tremors, vomiting, and rapid respiration. Single oral doses of 1,000 mg/kg in mice and rats were not lethal. Intravenous LD₅₀ values in mice and rats were 77 and 83 mg/kg, respectively.

DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION: (See complete prescribing information in Zantac[®] product labeling.)

Dosage Adjustment for Patients With Impaired Renal Function: On the basis of experience with a group of subjects with severely impaired renal function treated with Zantac, the recommended dosage in patients with a creatinine clearance less than 50 mL per minute is 150 mg or 10 mL (2 teaspoonfuls equivalent to 150 mg of ranitidine) every 24 hours. Should the patient's condition require, the frequency of dosing may be increased to every 12 hours or even further with caution. Hemodialysis reduces the level of circulating ranitidine. Ideally, the dosing schedule should be adjusted so that the timing of a scheduled dose coincides with the end of hemodialysis.

Computer systems to fit your needs

"I first read an ad for CompuSystems on the back of this same journal. At the time, I had an older computer system that just wasn't meeting my needs. Then I learned that a change in the system to allow electronic filing would be quite expensive without really improving it.

"We invited a CompuSystems salesman by. His demonstration of the system in my office showed me that the enthusiastic references I'd heard weren't just hype. He took time to get to know our practice, and he helped us decide on a configuration that suits our needs. No pressure, just a responsive professional who answered all our questions."

Software that inspires confidence

and collections in my office. The age of my receivables has been dramatically reduced. I can design my own reports to extract almost any information from the system. Most of all, I'm confident that the business side of my practice is under control."

Gaining peace of mind

"The peace of mind I get from CompuSystems is the best testimonial I can give. It's an investment that allows me to focus on practicing medicine, instead of on the business of medicine.

"If you'd like to hear more, please feel free to call me or drop by."

- More physicians in North and South Carolina choose CompuSystems' Medical Insurance Processing and Billing System than any other.
- Electronic filing directly to North Carolina Medicare, Medicaid, and BC/BS with no per-claim charges.
- Features to maximize return, improve cash flow, and increase productivity.
- "One-call" total system support, including on-site hardware service.

DEWEES ISLAND, SC?

Located only a nine-minute ferry ride north of the Isle of Palms lies one of the South's last barrier islands available for development...Dewees Island, SC.

Dewees Island is an island of over 1,200 acres, yet environmental covenants limit the number of homes to only 150. And with over 30 percent of the available lots sold, an interesting statistic arises...almost 50 percent of our buyers are physicians.

Here's why:

"I can't imagine a more beautifully preserved island within a stone's throw of Charleston."

Dewees Island has the vision that other resorts will wish they had." Dr. Henri Keiffer-Asheville, NC

"We loved the seclusion and privacy."

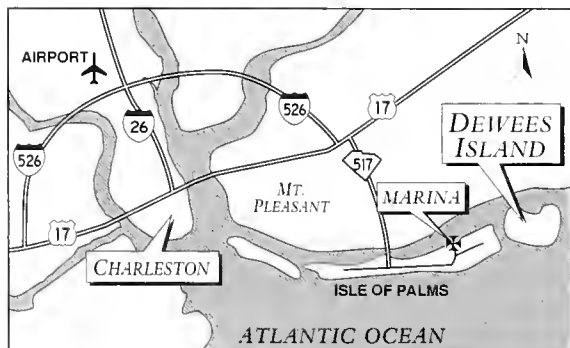

Dr. Allen Mitchell - Signal Mountain, TN

"We like the philosophy of development, ecologically and environmentally and plan to retire there." Dr. Joseph (Bubber) McAlhany - Greenville, SC

Come explore this private, oceanfront retreat...prices start at $150,000, with 2-acre oceanfront lots from $315,000.

AFFILIATE MEMBERS

Affiliate Members shall be physician assistants who are currently approved for practice by the N.C. Board of Medical Examiners and must be recommended for membership by a physician member of the NCMS. They may be appointed to committees and except for the right to vote and hold office, shall be entitled to all the privileges of The Society. They shall pay dues equal to 35% of the regular active member dues.

ASSOCIATE MEMBERS

Upon recommendation of a component society, a physician residing in North Carolina who has been a dues paying member of a state society(ies) belonging to the AMA Federation for 20 years and is retired shall pay dues at 60% of the active member dues. Those physicians in this category who are practicing 20 hours or less per week, shall pay dues at 75% of active member dues and shall have all the rights and privileges of the NCMS with the exception of holding office.

CONDITIONAL MEMBERS

A physician who has applied for membership in a component society but whose application process has not been completed through the component society shall be granted a conditional membership for a period of up to one year upon payment of dues. If at the end of this period, an applicant has not completed the component society application process, membership status in The Society will be transferred to Direct Member. Except for the right to vote and hold office the conditional member shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of The Society.

DIRECT MEMBERS

Direct members shall be physicians who reside in North Carolina counties where there is no viable component society or physicians who reside in North Carolina counties where there is a component society but do not wish membership in that component society. They shall have rights and privileges of active members including the right to vote and hold office.

A physician who is currently registered to practice in North Carolina and who has formerly been active, resident physician, or student member of The Society, but who is ineligible for active membership in a component society because of residence or practice outside the State, may be admitted to active membership by action of the Council.

DISABILITY EXEMPT MEMBERS

Current members of the NCMS whose disability is certified by their component society and who are retired from the profession of medicine shall be exempt from all dues and assessments and shall have all the rights and privileges of active members except the right to vote and hold office.

RETIRED MEMBERS

Physicians under the age of 70 who have been active members of the NCMS for at least 20 years and who are fully retired from the profession of medicine may become Retired Members. These physicians shall pay dues equal to 50% of the regular dues for Active Members and shall have all the rights and privileges of Active Membership including the right to vote and hold office.

HONORARY MEMBERS

Honorary Members must be nominated by the Council and must receive a two-thirds vote of the members of the House of Delegates. They shall be physicians distinguished by their contributions to medicine or physicians who have displayed an exceptional interest in the welfare of the NCMS; or reflected credit and honor upon the profession. They shall be exempt from all dues and assessments and, except for the right to vote and hold office, shall be entitled to all the privileges of the NCMS.

LIFE MEMBERS

Current members of The Society may qualify as Life Members if they have both retired from the profession of medicine and reached their 65th birthday by January 1 of the current year and have been dues paying members of The Society for 30 years; or if they have reached the age of 70 by January 1 of the current year and have been dues paying members for 20 years providing that they have been members of The Society for the prior five (5) years or exempted by Council action. They shall be exempt from all dues and assessments and shall be entitled to all the privileges enjoyed by Active Members including the right to vote and hold office. The time of a member's service in Armed Forces of our country except on a career basis shall be considered as membership in The Society.

NEWLY PRACTICING PHYSICIAN MEMBERS

Newly practicing physicians in their first, second and third year of practice shall be offered membership at 25% of regular dues in their first year of practice, 50% of regular dues in their second year of practice and 75% of regular dues in their third year of practice. They shall have the same rights and privileges as Active Members.

REGULAR ACTIVE MEMBERS

Active Members of the NCMS shall be the active members of the component societies, who pay dues to the NCMS and those physicians who are admitted by the Executive Council. Each component society shall be the judge of the qualifications of its members, but, as such societies are the portals to the NCMS and the AMA, only reputable physicians holding a license to practice medicine in NC shall be admitted as active members to component societies. They shall be entitled to all privileges of The Society including the right to vote and hold office.

RESIDENT/FELLOW MEMBERS

Physicians in a training program in North Carolina who hold unrestricted or training license to practice in this state, or physicians who are in training in hospitals which are accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals for residence training in the United States outside of North Carolina, may be admitted to membership in The Society directly or through membership in a component medical society for and during the period of time in which they are engaged in training. They shall have the same rights and privileges as Active Members except for the right to hold office.

SEMI-RETIRED MEMBERS

Current physician members of the NCMS who have been dues paying members of the NCMS for at least 30 years, who are at least 60 years of age, and who continue to be active in the profession of medicine but are working less than 20 hours per week may qualify for Semi-Retired Membership status. These physicians shall pay dues equal to 66% of active dues until they become eligible for Life Membership. They shall have the same rights and privileges as Active Members including the right to vote and hold office.

STUDENT MEMBERS

Any student who is regularly enrolled as a candidate for the degree of Doctor of Medicine in a NC medical school is eligible for NCMS student membership. These members shall enjoy all the rights and privileges of membership including the right to vote but not the right to hold office or the right to vote for members of Boards or Commissions who are appointed or elected by the NCMS according to State Law.

Committee and Commission Appointments 1993-1994

The committees listed herein have been authorized by President Elizabeth P. Kanof, MD, and/or as required under the Constitution and Bylaws and the Procedure and Policy Manual. Particular note should be taken of the authorization of the HOUSE OF DELEGATES of a commission form of organization activity and that all committees except COMPENSATION COMMITTEE, COORDINATING COUNCIL OF SPECIALTY SOCIETIES, MEDIATION COMMITTEE, NOMINATING COMMITTEE, and PLANNING COUNCIL are segregated under the respective commission in which the function of the committee logically rests. This will tend to eliminate overlapping and duplication in activity programs and result in coordination of the work of the Society in a manner to lessen the work of the Delegates during the Annual Meeting of the HOUSE OF DELEGATES.

(Superior figures (e.g. 21) indicate the component county society from which the member emanates, as in the membership list of the ROSTER.)

BE PART OF AN OPERATION THAT'LL MAKE YOU FEEL BETTER

As an Air Force Reserve physician, you'll experience all the rewards of providing care. And then some. Because as part of our nation's vital defense team, you'll help protect the strength and pride of America. In the Air Force Reserve, you'll feel the excitement a change of pace brings as you gain the prestige of military rank and the privilege of working with some of the world's best medical professionals—in a program that's flexible enough to fit your schedule. The Air Force Reserve. It's a great way to serve.

"Ron's Rule—I give myself one week to meet new people and start having fun on a locum tenens assignment. It hasn't failed me yet."

Ron Richmond, MD, joined the CompHealth locum tenens medical staff when he completed his residency. He wanted to travel. He loves to meet people.

A little time off sounded really good. And he thinks being exposed to different types of medical practice will serve him well when he returns to his hometown to establish a community health center.

A singer. A board-certified family practitioner. Soft-spoken for a New Yorker. Ron Richmond knows...

practice medicine

COUNCILOR DISTRICTS
Constitution and Bylaws of the North Carolina Medical Society

Article VIII — Sections, Districts and District Societies

The House of Delegates, in order to promote the purposes of The Society, shall provide for the organization of councilor districts and for the designation of scientific sections. It may provide for the organization of district societies composed of members of component societies.

Chapter VII — Councilor Districts

First District — Bertie-Gates-Hertford, Chowan-Perquimans, and Pasquotank-Camden-Currituck-Dare.

Second District — Beaufort-Hyde-Martin-Washington-Tyrrell, Carteret, Craven-Pamlico-Jones, Lenoir-Greene and Pitt.

Third District — Edgecombe, Halifax-Northampton, Johnston, Nash, Warren, Wayne, and Wilson.

Fourth District — New Hanover-Pender.

Fifth District — Bladen, Brunswick, Columbus, Duplin, Harnett, Onslow, Robeson, and Sampson.

Sixth District — Wake.

Seventh District — Durham-Orange.

Eighth District — Cumberland.

Ninth District — Alamance-Caswell, Chatham, Franklin, Granville, Lee, Person, Randolph, Rockingham, and Vance.

Tenth District — Guilford (Greensboro and High Point).

Eleventh District — Forsyth-Stokes-Davie.

Twelfth District — Anson, Cabarrus, Hoke, Montgomery, Moore, Richmond, Scotland, Stanly and Union.

Thirteenth District — Mecklenburg.

Fourteenth District — Alleghany, Ashe, Davidson, Iredell, Rowan, Surry-Yadkin, and Wilkes.

Fifteenth District — Alexander, Avery, Burke, Caldwell, Catawba, Mitchell-Yancey, and Watauga.

Seventeenth District — Cherokee, Graham, Haywood, Henderson, Jackson, Macon-Clay, Polk, Swain, and Transylvania.

Eighteenth District — Buncombe and Madison.

PHYSICIAN RESIDENT ALERT: IF YOU COULD USE OVER $25,000 A YEAR— ANSWER THIS AD.

The U.S. Army's Financial Assistance Program (FAP) is offering a subsidy of over $25,000 a year for training in certain medical specialties.

Here's how it breaks down - an annual grant, plus a monthly stipend and reimbursement of approved educational expenses.

You will be part of a unique health care team where you will find many opportunities to continue your medical education, work at state-of-the-art facilities, and receive outstanding benefits.

So, if you are a physician resident who could use over $25,000 a year, contact an Army Medical Counselor immediately.

Call Collect 919-493-1364

STUDENT MEMBERSHIP

By authority of the Executive Council, a medical student membership is provided. This class of membership expires immediately upon completion of training in a recognized school of medicine located in North Carolina. Residents of North Carolina enrolled in a recognized school of medicine in another state are eligible for such membership.

Alphabetical List of Members

Fifty Year Club

The House of Delegates of the North Carolina Medical Society in May of 1953, authorized the Executive Council of The Society to establish a special recognition for those physicians residing in the State of North Carolina who were members currently of the State Medical Society, who had established legal practice of medicine and who had actively practiced medicine during their life time for a period of fifty years.

Listed below in alphabetical order are the names and addresses of those physicians who resided in North Carolina and whom the North Carolina Medical Society has recognized as members of the FIFTY YEAR CLUB of the State Medical Society. This list will be added to from year to year and likewise subtracted from as losses to this club group are sustained and reckoned.

The listing for 1993 only may include Fifty Year Club members who have passed away since their recognition. The list for other years will include only those members surviving.

...a promise to defend...

HERE ARE THE FACTS: Over 25% of America's Physicians were embroiled in a malpractice issue in the last 12 months. More than 80% of those malpractice allegations will be closed without an award for damages. Your professional reputation and your personal assets are on the line when your professional liability carrier is not both financially sound and experienced in the law and the judicial system.

WHEN THE ISSUES ARE LEGAL, NOT MEDICAL—when the allegations are frivolous, or highly emotional—you need a company and legal representation that understands the problem and has the experience to resolve the issue. The Medical Protective Company has specialized in defending doctors since 1899. Our legal and claims management experience is unmatched by any other insurer in the U.S.

FOR MORE INFORMATION on how we can protect your professional reputation and your personal assets, call your local Medical Protective General Agent at 1-800-344-1899.

Medical Groups Fight Back!

The Clinton Pension Cap (One size squeezes all)

As if the Clinton "tax reforms" didn't hit medical practitioners hard enough in the first place, now we have to contend with the President's "Pension Cap". Beginning in 1994, the maximum compensation to be used in calculating benefits under a "defined contribution" pension or profit sharing plan is $150,000 — regardless of the fact that many professionals earn a good deal more than that amount.

This leaves the typical practitioner with only two choices — neither of which is very palatable. Either settle for a smaller personal pension contribution or put in a whole lot more money for employees. How much more money? Depending on how the plan is set up, between 5% and 8½% of employees' compensation. That's a nice raise for your staff, but can you afford it?

Put this together with what's likely to come out of "Health Care Reform" and it all adds up to the opportunity to work harder for less reward and retire at an older age on less income.

How does the "pension cap" work? It's very simple. Since $150,000 is the maximum income you can take into account, and $30,000 is the most you can put into the plan for yourself, this works out to 20% this year. Last year, you could put in $30,000 based on income up to $235,840 — that worked out to 12.7%.

The government seems to be counting on it that professionals are just going to go placidly along with these terrific changes. Probably a lot of people will. However, there are a lot of people who are ready to fight back.

Find out how to fight back against the government's invasion of your retirement next egg. Learn the three facts the Internal Revenue Service hopes you never discover.

Learn how to maintain your defined contribution plan at pre-1994 levels while incurring little or no additional cost in respect to other employees.

Learn how to increase your personal retirement funding without incurring any cost for other employees. Learn how a simple change in the type of plan you have may result in dramatic savings in terms of required contribution for other employees.

YOHIMBINE HCl

Description: Yohimbine is a 3a-15a-20B-17a-hydroxy Yohimbine-16a-carboxylic acid methyl ester. The alkaloid is found in Rubaceae and related trees. Also in Rauwolfia Serpentina (L) Benth. Yohimbine is an indolalkylamine alkaloid with chemical similarity to reserpine. It is a crystalline powder, odorless. Each compressed tablet contains (1/12 gr.) 5.4 mg of Yohimbine Hydrochloride.

Action: Yohimbine blocks presynaptic alpha-2 adrenergic receptors. Its action on peripheral blood vessels resembles that of reserpine, though it is weaker and of short duration. Yohimbine's peripheral autonomic nervous system effect is to increase parasympathetic (cholinergic) and decrease sympathetic (adrenergic) activity. It is to be noted that in male sexual performance, erection is linked to cholinergic activity and to alpha-2 adrenergic blockade which may theoretically result in increased penile inflow, decreased penile outflow or both.

Yohimbine exerts a stimulating action on the mood and may increase anxiety. Such actions have not been adequately studied or related to dosage although they appear to require high doses of the drug. Yohimbine has a mild anti-diuretic action, probably via stimulation of hypothalamic centers and release of posterior pituitary hormone.

Reportedly, Yohimbine exerts no significant influence on cardiac stimulation and other effects mediated by B-adrenergic receptors, its effect on blood pressure, if any, would be to lower it; however no adequate studies are at hand to quantitate this effect in terms of Yohimbine dosage.

Indications: Yocon® is indicated as a sympatholytic and mydriatic. It may have activity as an aphrodisiac.

Contraindications: Renal diseases, and patient's sensitive to the drug. In view of the limited and inadequate information at hand, no precise tabulation can be offered of additional contraindications.

Warning: Generally, this drug is not proposed for use in females and certainly must not be used during pregnancy. Neither is this drug proposed for use in pediatric, geriatric or cardio-renal patients with gastric or duodenal ulcer history. Nor should it be used in conjunction with mood-modifying drugs such as antidepressants, or in psychiatric patients in general.

Adverse Reactions: Yohimbine readily penetrates the (CNS) and produces a complex pattern of responses in lower doses than required to produce peripheral a-adrenergic blockade. These include, anti-diuresis, a general picture of central excitation including elevation of blood pressure and heart rate, increased motor activity, irritability and tremor. Sweating, nausea and vomiting are common after parenteral administration of the drug.^{1,2} Also dizziness, headache, skin flushing reported when used orally.^{1,3}

Dosage and Administration: Experimental dosage reported in treatment of erectile impotence.^{1,3,4} 1 tablet (5.4 mg) 3 times a day, to adult males taken orally. Occasional side effects reported with this dosage are nausea, dizziness or nervousness. In the event of side effects dosage to be reduced to ½ tablet 3 times a day, followed by gradual increases to 1 tablet 3 times a day. Reported therapy not more than 10 weeks.³

How Supplied: Oral tablets of Yocon® 1/12 gr. 5.4 mg in bottles of 100's NDC 53159-001-01 and 1000's NDC 53159-001-10.

Earning its way from the first day

“CompuSystems’ Medical Practice Management System has been an integral part of my practice since I opened five years ago. Actually, we had the equipment in place and had been through training two weeks before opening. That investment paid off right away: In our first day, we used the Appointment Scheduler module to make 76 appointments.”

Flexible software to suit your needs

“One of the Medical System features we’ve found most beneficial is its flexibility. There’s almost always more than one way to complete a given task, so we can select the options that suit our preferences and operational needs. And CompuSystems’ staff is always available to help us determine how best to use the software in our office.”

Outstanding service to stay productive

“The service and maintenance we get from CompuSystems couldn’t be better. They stay on top of the myriad changes implemented by Medicare and other third-party carriers, so our software is always up to date. If we have a question or problem, we can get the help we need. Finally, consistency is provided at all levels: The telephone support staff keeps excellent records, so we don’t start over each time we call, and the on-site hardware service is expert.

“After five years, I have only praise for CompuSystems, and I can’t imagine running my practice without their help.”

Oceanfront Living Like Nowhere Else in the World.

*I*n a lush and beautiful area just south of Charleston lies a private island called Jeremy Cay...it is a place of history and Southern folklore, where dirt roads wind lazily among live oaks, palmettos, and tidal lagoons, past some of the most majestic scenery in the Southeast.

To say that Jeremy Cay offers "oceanfront living like nowhere else" is certainly no overstatement; it is naturally secluded from the rest of the world, yet only minutes from restaurants, tennis, and golf. It is a place for families to gather - and enjoy together the creeks, marshes, and two miles of private beach that surround this pristine retreat. It offers something for everyone...and with 38 oceanfront and creekside homesites available, it won't last long.

Call or write for information and a color brochure.

To the Editor:

Mr. Durham distinguishes himself by reviewing the contributions of Dr. Mary Frances Shuford in Asheville during 1934-1983 (NC Med J 1994;55:90-2). Her contributions to the African American population and to the less fortunate citizens of Asheville and its surrounding communities are an inspiration to all of us who work for improved access to health care for all of our citizens.

Dr. Shuford's story is also one of the evolution of organized medicine in North Carolina. Few of us would be pleased with the lack of support that she received during her early years in Asheville, but I believe that all physicians would be pleased with the progress of the Buncombe County Medical Society in response to Dr. Shuford's leadership, as Mr. Durham described so well. I had the opportunity to meet Dr. Shuford on one occasion, and I was very pleased to learn much more about the life of this remarkable woman by reading Mr. Durham's article.

Reinventing Traditional Medicine

To the Editor:

I had the same reaction to the article "The Reinvention of Traditional Medicine in Western North Carolina" (NC Med J 1993;54:550-2) that Dr. Stafford did, but I did not have the stimulus to write until I read his excellent letter in the January issue (NC Med J 1994;55:5). He dealt with the substance of the article quite well.

My complaint is for the editors. Looking over the copy of the Journal, I was led to believe that I was going to read about some interesting folk medicine as practiced by the Cherokees, and I wound up reading something advocating a New Age ceremony, which is akin to voodoo. People can write what they want, but it should be labeled properly.

E.S. Whitesides, MD
Southern Orthopaedics, PA
992 Cox Road, Suite D
Gastonia, NC 28054

From the Editor:

We specifically used the word reinvention in Webster's sense ("reinvent": to remake or redo completely) in order to alert readers to the fact that the article concerned the reinterpretation of Cherokee traditions in western North Carolina, and was not a discussion of established traditional healing systems.

Christian Ethics Teaching Tool

To the Editor:

Thank you for recently granting me permission to use Harmon Smith's article, "Physician-Assisted Suicide: Both Physicians and Christians Should Know That This is Not an Idea Whose Time Has Come," (NC Med J 1993;54:378-82) in a packet of readings I have put together for a course on Christian ethics.

I chose the article for several reasons. The most important one is that the article displays clearly the pattern of moral reasoning I try to teach in my class, i.e., one that is non-foundational, rooted in the Christian tradition, and open to and interested in conversation with others. Most of my students are not convinced that such an approach can work, as they think all serious Christians must be fundamentalists; the article therefore models for them a new way of thinking and talking about Christian faith and its moral import. (The fact that I was a student of Dr. Smith's in the graduate religion program at Duke accounts for much of my attraction to his approach; I learned a lot from him.)

Another reason for choosing this article is that it fits in nicely with a unit of the course on death and its management and provides succinct background on the topic. And the topic is so timely, what with Jack Kervorkian being in the news so much.

Thank you again for permission to use the article. I will be very interested in seeing how it works out in class.

Sekh-Met: Reevaluating Pagan Mythology

To the Editor:

I was surprised to see Dr. Dennis A. Greene's article on pagan religion in a scientific journal ("Sekh-Met: First Goddess of Medicine," NC Med J 1994;55:94-5). To publish such an essay 500 years ago might have meant torture on the rack or death as a heretic. Now that Christianity has lost its power to control the mind we should openly reevaluate pagan mythology because there is always some truth in universal beliefs that have remained unchanged over a span of 5,000 years.

Pagan mythology contains all of the traditional knowledge of personality prototypes that psychologist Carl Jung attempted to analyze and define. Jung suggested that people who could interpret the meaning of mythological symbolism would be able to define personality prototypes in modern logical terms. Intelligent, intuitive people, like "Star Trek" creator Gene Roddenberry, possess this knowledge. His characters reflect the standard personality prototypes of the pagan gods, such as Athena or Asclepius.

Sekh-met is one of the easier symbols to identify. She represents a personality prototype associated with the constellation Leo Minor. In Babylonian mythology she is known as Gula, the Great Doctress. In Greek mythology Sekh-met was known as Athena. Athena knew how to identify and use medicinal plants. She was goddess of wisdom, handicrafts, and war and was consulted before battle. She considered herself to be the most beautiful goddess and would destroy anyone who claimed otherwise. In Roman mythology she represents the goddess Minerva.

Other physicians documented in mythology are Asclepius, Chiron, Erichonius, and a unicorn god whose name escapes me.

Thomas Lee Taylor, MD
116 Jones Drive
Dunn, NC 28334

From the Editor:

We were surprised Dr. Taylor was "surprised" to see the article. The Journal is primarily a medical publication; science, while important, is only a part of doctoring.

To the Editor:

My compliments to Dr. Dennis Greene on his article on the first known Deity of Medicine (NC Med J 1994;55:94-5). He noted that Sekh-met was the Goddess of War, but she may have been known best as the destroyer of people and as the purveyor of disease and death. Adoration for her and worship of her apparently developed as a counter-phobic attempt to control her malignant powers. This characteristic of early mankind has survived the millenia as the adage, "if you can't whup 'em, jine 'em!"

Fan Mail From Near and Far

To the Editor:

Having been a previous reader of the North Carolina Medical Journal and having recently returned to North Carolina, I found that Dr. Stead had relinquished his responsibilities as editor. I expected that the quality of the Journal might wane as the interest and legacy that Dr. Stead commanded disappeared. I have been pleasantly surprised at the Journal's continued ability to shun the conformism of current medical publications for a more open format that allows the North Carolina medical community to share ideas, experiences, and commentary on the issues important to us.

I have been especially pleased with the focused issues, such as the October 1993 issue on rural health in North Carolina. The broad dialogue this journal facilitates is essential to our continued sense of community as North Carolina physicians and to the understanding of what we do. Please continue your efforts to assist us in this interchange.

To the Editor:

I recently noted in the "ASPIRE International" newsletter (Vol. 2, No. 2) an article from the February 1993 North Carolina Medical Journal, "Drama in the Medical School Classroom: The Actor as Patient," by Joan Tetel-Hanks (NC Med J 1993;54:105-9).

Is it possible to request a reprint of this? As dean of a small medical school in a Third World country, I am interested on how this program is done.

From the Editor:

We were happy to send Dr. Rivera a copy of Ms. Hanks' article and appreciate his interest in the Journal.

Cancer Screening

To the Editor:

The article "Screening for Colon Cancer: Is It Worth the Expense?" (NC Med J 1993;54:634-8) suffers a glaring omission. Only once in the entire article are the words "barium enema" mentioned, and then only in passing.

Let me introduce this new technology to the authors. The barium enema is safer, more comfortable, four- to six-fold cheaper, and more quickly performed than colonoscopy. Its diagnostic efficacy is comparable to colonoscopy, with the reported accuracy in detection of significant polyps in the 95% range.¹⁻⁴

The authors correctly assign the digital rectal exam and the fecal occult blood test to the nether realms of worth in screening, but oddly give flexible sigmoidoscopy good marks. The "flex sig" at best will leave 50% of the colon and 50% of cancers or potential cancers unsurveyed. This is not good performance for a screening exam. What if we decided to start doing only unilateral mammograms to screen for breast cancer? This would certainly be ludicrous. Why go halfway in the colon? Barium enema and total colonoscopy are the only means of total colon surveillance. Colonoscopy is too expensive to apply to a large segment of the population, it is not without significant risk, and it is not the foolproof method that endoscopists would have us believe. Its only indisputable advantage over the barium enema is its ability to biopsy or remove polyps.

It is time for primary care physicians to rediscover the barium enema. You can be sure that the third parties and managed care folks are looking at the tab for endoscopy. At a cost of $175 to $250 for the complete exam (compared to $1,000+ for colonoscopy), performed at three- to five-year intervals⁵ after age 50, the screening barium enema would cost about the same or less per patient than annual screening mammography. We need to develop cost-effective strategies for colon cancer screening in order for it to be "worth it."

The Authors Reply:

We thank Dr. Remington for his letter and offer the following as a reply.

To our knowledge, there have been no randomized trials prospectively investigating the value of barium enema (BE) or colonoscopy in colorectal cancer screening. Three of the sources Dr. Remington cites¹⁻³ are retrospective, and somewhat antiquated, case series that describe results of BE in patients with known cancer, or who were at especially high risk. These case series do not provide meaningful information to help resolve health care screening matters. The fourth⁴ citation is an opinion paper by a radiologist arguing for the use of BE as an initial test investigating colon complaints, not for cancer screening. On balance, these papers contribute little useful, scientific information that can clarify issues concerning colorectal cancer screening.

Dr. Eddy's paper⁵ used a mathematical model that made assumptions about costs accrued and benefits gained from a number of tests in different screening strategies. The data he used for estimating the worth of BE consisted of several case series comparing its accuracy with that of colonoscopy. In addition, a panel of experts from the Patient Care Subcommittee of the National Digestive Diseases Advisory Board was given a questionnaire asking its opinion on the various diagnostic procedures. The operating characteristics of BE and colonoscopy were discovered to be nearly the same. Dr. Eddy's calculations allow for a number of different screening options, and he recommends that average risk individuals over 50 years of age should have annual fecal occult blood tests (FOBT) and a flexible sigmoidoscopy every three to five years. His study did not include the new study results on FOBT⁶ and flexible sigmoidoscopy,⁷ and it would be interesting to revisit his model in light of these data.

It is worth noting that no major society—not the American Cancer Society, American Society of Gastroenterology, National Cancer Institute, American College of Physicians, Canadian Services Task Force, or the American Preventive Services Task Force—advocates the use of either barium enema or colonoscopy as screening tests for patients at average risk. Neither test is appropriate for screening this population as there are no quality data showing they improve patient survival.

Recommending a screening strategy for patients at high risk is very difficult primarily because no data demonstrate that any screening test improves survival in this population. Patients at high risk should certainly follow, at the minimum, our basic recommendations for all patients: flexible sigmoidoscopy and prudent use of FOBT. One might even argue that extremely high-risk patients ought to have the entire colon visualized and the two tests available would be BE and colonoscopy.

When choosing between BE and colonoscopy, we think it important that the practitioner and the patient discuss the patient's preferences. Many reports, including those referenced by Dr. Remington, conclude that the diagnostic operating characteristics of BE and colonoscopy are similar. Thus, which test the patient prefers greatly influences the choice of one over the other. Specifically, patients should be asked whether they prefer colonoscopy, which provides definitive diagnostic information and also may provide definitive treatment. Recently, the benefit of colonoscopic polypectomy in preventing colon cancer has been reported.⁸ On the other hand, BE could be chosen, but if it reveals suspicious lesions, colonoscopy would then also be required. The benefit of choosing BE lies in the instance where one may forego colonoscopy entirely, that is, when the initial screening test was falsely positive.

Finally, we wish to clarify any confusion Dr. Remington may have regarding the difference between early detection of disease and the adequate scientific evaluation of "emerging technologies." Screening for disease in asymptomatic patients was the main thrust of our article. We would agree that it is disheartening when a familiar diagnostic test like barium enema has not been adequately evaluated in a screening setting and thus cannot be considered in a paper dealing with cancer screening. We also share Dr. Remington's dismay at the 'incompleteness' of flexible sigmoidoscopy. Despite the epidemiological data suggesting that a large majority of polyps form distally, i.e., within the range of the 60 cm sigmoidoscope, there will be some patients whose cancer develops outside of this range and will therefore be missed. One of the inherent problems of making general recommendations is that they may not apply to every individual patient. But in attempting to suggest a rational approach to screening for colorectal cancer for the general population, we still think our approach makes the most sense of the limited scientific evidence.

To the Editor:

At the Intellectual Society Meeting at Chatham Hospital on December 23, 1993, Dr. Robert Evans, a Greensboro urologist, noted our improved capacity to interpret the meaning of the prostate-specific antigen. Briefly, he said that the normal values increase with age and with the size of the prostate gland. I will defer to Dr. Evans for a published reference.

It appears that this is new information that has appeared since Drs. Wong and Feussner and myself wrote articles, letters, and replies for the Journal. Such information would influence our interpretation of the PSA as a potential screening agent for cancer of the prostate. We can be a little more sophisticated than "below 4 is okay, and above 4 is cancer."

The Authors Reply:

We are pleased that Dr. Dykers finds the PSA controversy stimulating.

The fact that the PSA level tends to increase with age and the size of the prostate gland is really not "new" information as Dr. Dykers suggests. This increase in value with the increase in age and size is the main reason for the so-called "Normal Benign Prostate Hyper trophy" (BPH) range given with most PSA determinations, roughly 4.0-10.0 ng/mL. The "Normal" normal range is usually 0.0-4.0 ng/mL.

Dr. Dykers may be referring to a recent paper that addresses the above topic.¹ This paper does report that older patients tended to have higher PSA values, and, in fact, proposes a series of "normal ranges" for each age group. It should be noted that all patients with prostate cancer were specifically excluded from their analysis and their compilation of "normal" values. The very need for having different "normal" ranges underscores the problems encountered with using the PSA test as a screening tool; any given PSA value for any particular patient is rarely helpful in deciding when to send that patient for prostate biopsy.

The practitioner who obtains a PSA test is left with the difficult task of interpreting this piece of information. What do you recommend to your asymptomatic 65-year-old patient with a PSA of 6.0 ng/mL? At this level there is some possibility he has prostate cancer. There is also the possibility he only has BPH. Has the test helped you in deciding whether or not he needs a biopsy? Our analysis concludes that the ability of the PSA test to accurately detect prostate cancer remains suspect, and having different normal values at different ages does little to improve this accuracy. We do not advocate the use of the PSA for routine mass screening for prostate cancer.²

Continuing Controversy:

Doctors vs. Lawyers

To the Editor:

I think Dr. Peacock applied his unique experience in an astute and perceptive manner in, "Doctors vs. Lawyers: A Robert Burns Analysis," (NC Med J 1994; 55:41-3). I find nothing of substance to disagree with, only to build upon.

Chief Justice Exum and I have discussed this dilemma at length, as I also have with my medical colleague, Dr. Bruce Blackmon. From these discussions and my own subsequent ruminations, I suggest some additions.

I'd like to elaborate on what Dr. Peacock wrote: "...the two professions analyze and solve problems in different ways." Attorneys must rely on the adversary system to arrive at the truth. Their task is to "stack the deck" in favor of their clients; it is the jury's duty to sort out the truth. If physicians were to simply argue in favor of one diagnosis and ignore the other possibilities, they would truly be negligent! And we are faced with the reality that the diagnosis must be changed whenever we possess new information or new insight. Moreover, all of us with enough gray hair have seen our ways of looking at disease and pathology turned on their ear so many times that we have learned to remain skeptical.

Physicians certainly do have a sense of injustice when lawyers create laws that protect those lawyers from negligence in the courtroom; just because things happen fast there is no reason that they should be held liable. Similar protection, provided to physicians working in emergency rooms and critical care units might foster greater brotherhood.

When lawyers act as counselors of law, they much more nearly approach the attitude of their physician brethren. Helping clients resolve their disputes in an equitable manner outside of the courtroom is the great triumph of an attorney. Unfortunately, that blessed activity may not pay as well as a courtroom battle. Taking advantage of the ire of a client may represent more monetary gain and less wisdom.

I have struggled for the past year with the notion that, "If you didn't document it, you didn't do it." This statement is patently phony. I make so many observations in a single moment of a patient encounter that it is impossible for me to record most of them as part of the history and physical. In fact this concept underlies the courtroom trial. Otherwise there would be no reason for a trial because testimony could be taken in depositions and presented to the jury to read at their leisure. Non-verbal cues are not only part of a trial, but astute attorneys learn how to manipulate them to the benefit of their clients even at the expense of truth.

Equally phony is the concept of "standard of care." The notion is so beguiling that even we physicians have bought into it. We wish so dearly that it were true; that if we did everything just so, the patient would be okay; that we would be okay as physicians. If nothing else, the explosion of medical knowledge changes our perceptions of care so rapidly that the best we can reasonably do is substitute a "standard of care." The human organism is enormously complex; its constant change due to biology and disease forces us to abandon Newtonian logic and diagnostic cubbyholes.

Maybe if we begin to think in new ways, in the future both doctors and lawyers can be more human. In the meantime, physicians and lawyers do need to cooperate in order to deal appropriately with behavioral consequences of crime, drug abuse, adolescent pregnancy, sexually transmitted diseases, and end-of-life dilemmas. We need better cooperation, less animosity, and some form of a meeting of the minds.

John R. Dykers, Jr., MD
P.O. Box 565
Siler City, NC 27344

To the Editor:

In his article, "Doctors vs. Lawyers: A Robert Burns Analysis," (NC Med J 199;54:41-3), Dr. Peacock brings up some interesting issues like the fact that doctors are not organized and do not have legal power of collective bargaining. Like Dr. Peacock, I feel that good lawyers do not abuse the legal process, but some not so good lawyers do. These lawyers inflict pain and suffering on physicians by their actions. This is the issue that upsets physicians. It appears that patients and lawyers are legally and emotionally justified in bringing suit against a physician even when they don't understand the complexities of medical situations and medical decision-making. It seems that physicians have essentially no recourse other than to defend themselves from plaintiffs' accusations.

Lawsuits subject physicians to a tremendous amount of emotional and financial abuse without recompense. These legal assaults without opportunity for redress create great pain for physicians. Adopting the English system of requiring the losing party to pay litigation expenses would alleviate some of the pain for the 80% of physicians who are vindicated of malpractice. Compensating physicians for their lost time in the office, hospital, and operating room might assuage their anger. Perhaps allowing only a very specialized group of attorneys who are both MD/JDs to try medical malpractice cases would be an appropriate way of weeding out the "not so good lawyers" who bring non-meritorious cases to court.

We obviously have a long way to go to bridge the chasm between physicians and attorneys. I hope Dr. Peacock's article makes its way to some of the appropriate legal journals as well.

Book Review Thank You

To the Editor:

Thank you for printing the kind words about my book, and a special thanks to Dr. Halperin for taking the time to read it (Book review: The Window of Childhood: Glimpses of Wonder and Courage, NC Med J 1994;55:48-9). I have learned more about writing and publishing (and marketing!) than I knew I needed. Now that I am at work on my second book, I plan to be more assertive in getting the publishers to spread the word about it.

State Journal Status

To the Editor:

I was disturbed to discover recently that several state medical journals (New York, Indiana, and Ohio) have ceased publication for various reasons. Given the prevailing national environment, my respect for the quality of the North Carolina Medical Journal continues to grow.

Let us all do what we can to keep our journal as we want it to be.

Zantac® 300 (ranitidine hydrochloride) Tablets

BRIEF SUMMARY

Zantac® (ranitidine hydrochloride) Syrup
The following is a brief summary only. Before prescribing, see complete prescribing information in Zantac® product labeling.

INDICATIONS AND USAGE: Zantac® is indicated in: 1. Short-term treatment of active duodenal ulcer. 2. Maintenance therapy for duodenal ulcer patients at reduced dosage after healing of acute ulcers. 3. The treatment of pathological hypersecretory conditions (e.g., Zollinger-Ellison syndrome and systemic mastocytosis). 4. Short-term treatment of active, benign gastric ulcer. 5. Treatment of gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD). 6. Treatment of endoscopically diagnosed erosive esophagitis.

Concomitant antacids should be given as needed for pain relief to patients with active duodenal ulcer, active, benign gastric ulcer, hypersecretory states, GERD, and erosive esophagitis.

CONTRAINDICATIONS: Zantac® is contraindicated for patients known to have hypersensitivity to the drug or any of the ingredients.

PRECAUTIONS: General: 1. Symptomatic response to Zantac® therapy does not preclude the presence of gastric malignancy. 2. Since Zantac is excreted primarily by the kidney, dosage should be adjusted in patients with impaired renal function (see DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION). Caution should be observed in patients with hepatic dysfunction since Zantac is metabolized in the liver. 3. Rare reports suggest that Zantac may precipitate acute porphyric attacks in patients with acute porphyria. Zantac should therefore be avoided in patients with a history of acute porphyria.

Laboratory Tests: False-positive tests for urine protein with Multistix® may occur during Zantac therapy, and therefore testing with sulfosalicylic acid is recommended.

Drug Interactions: Although Zantac has been reported to bind weakly to cytochrome P-450 in vitro, recommended doses of the drug do not inhibit the action of the cytochrome P-450-linked oxygenase enzymes in the liver. However, there have been isolated reports of drug interactions that suggest that Zantac may affect the bioavailability of certain drugs by some mechanism as yet unidentified (e.g., a pH-dependent effect on absorption or a change in volume of distribution). Increased or decreased prothrombin times have been reported during concurrent use of ranitidine and warfarin. However, in human pharmacokinetic studies with dosages of ranitidine up to 400 mg per day, no interaction occurred; ranitidine had no effect on warfarin clearance or prothrombin time. The possibility of an interaction with warfarin at dosages of ranitidine higher than 400 mg per day has not been investigated.

Carcinogenesis, Mutagenesis, Impairment of Fertility: There was no indication of tumorigenic or carcinogenic effects in life-span studies in mice and rats at dosages up to 2,000 mg/kg per day. Ranitidine was not mutagenic in standard bacterial tests (Salmonella, Escherichia coli) for mutagenicity at concentrations up to the maximum recommended for these assays. In a dominant lethal assay, a single oral dose of 1,000 mg/kg to male rats was without effect on the outcome of two matings per week for the next 5 weeks.

Pregnancy: Teratogenic Effects: Pregnancy Category B: Reproduction studies have been performed in rats and rabbits at doses up to 160 times the human dose and have revealed no evidence of impaired fertility or harm to the fetus due to Zantac. There are, however, no adequate and well-controlled studies in pregnant women. Because animal reproduction studies are not always predictive of human response, this drug should be used during pregnancy only if clearly needed.

Nursing Mothers: Zantac is secreted in human milk. Caution should be exercised when Zantac is administered to a nursing mother.

Pediatric Use: Safety and effectiveness in children have not been established. Use in Elderly Patients: Ulcer healing rates in elderly patients (65-82 years of age) were no different from those in younger age-groups. The incidence rates for adverse events and laboratory abnormalities were also not different from those seen in other age-groups.

ADVERSE REACTIONS: The following have been reported as events in clinical trials or in the routine management of patients treated with Zantac®. The relationship to Zantac therapy has been unclear in many cases. Headache, sometimes severe, seems to be related to Zantac administration.

Central Nervous System: Rarely, malaise, dizziness, somnolence, insomnia, and vertigo. Rare cases of reversible mental confusion, agitation, depression, and hallucinations have been reported, predominantly in severely ill elderly patients. Rare cases of reversible blurred vision suggestive of a change in accommodation have been reported. Rare reports of reversible involuntary motor disturbances have been received.

Cardiovascular: As with other H₂-blockers, rare reports of arrhythmias such as tachycardia, bradycardia, atrioventricular block, and premature ventricular beats.

Hepatic: In normal volunteers, SGPT values were increased to at least twice the pretreatment levels in 6 of 12 subjects receiving 100 mg q.i.d. intravenously for 7 days, and in 4 of 24 subjects receiving 50 mg q.i.d. intravenously for 5 days. There have been occasional reports of hepatitis, hepatocellular or hepatocanalicular or mixed, with or without jaundice. In such circumstances, ranitidine should be immediately discontinued. These events are usually reversible, but in exceedingly rare circumstances death has occurred.

Musculoskeletal: Rare reports of arthralgias and myalgias.

Hematologic: Blood count changes (leukopenia, granulocytopenia, and thrombocytopenia) have occurred in a few patients. These were usually reversible. Rare cases of agranulocytosis, pancytopenia, sometimes with marrow hypoplasia, and aplastic anemia and exceedingly rare cases of acquired immune hemolytic anemia have been reported.

Endocrine: Controlled studies in animals and man have shown no stimulation of any pituitary hormone by Zantac and no antiandrogenic activity, and cimetidine-induced gynecomastia and impotence in hypersecretory patients have resolved when Zantac has been substituted. However, occasional cases of gynecomastia, impotence, and loss of libido have been reported in male patients receiving Zantac, but the incidence did not differ from that in the general population.

Other: Rare cases of hypersensitivity reactions (e.g., bronchospasm, fever, rash, eosinophilia), anaphylaxis, angioneurotic edema, and small increases in serum creatinine.

OVERDOSAGE: There has been limited experience with overdosage. Reported acute ingestions of up to 18 g orally have been associated with transient adverse effects similar to those encountered in normal clinical experience (see ADVERSE REACTIONS). In addition, abnormalities of gait and hypotension have been reported. When overdosage occurs, the usual measures to remove unabsorbed material from the gastrointestinal tract, clinical monitoring, and supportive therapy should be employed. Studies in dogs receiving dosages of Zantac in excess of 225 mg/kg per day have shown muscular tremors, vomiting, and rapid respiration. Single oral doses of 1,000 mg/kg in mice and rats were not lethal. Intravenous LD₅₀ values in mice and rats were 77 and 83 mg/kg, respectively.

Dosage Adjustment for Patients With Impaired Renal Function: On the basis of experience with a group of subjects with severely impaired renal function treated with Zantac, the recommended dosage in patients with a creatinine clearance less than 50 mL per minute is 150 mg or 10 mL (2 teaspoonsful equivalent to 150 mg of ranitidine) every 24 hours. Should the patient's condition require, the frequency of dosing may be increased to every 12 hours or even further with caution. Hemodialysis reduces the level of circulating ranitidine. Ideally, the dosing schedule should be adjusted so that the timing of a scheduled dose coincides with the end of hemodialysis.

For Efficacy As Maintenance Therapy
In Healed Duodenal Ulcer Disease

PROVEN SUPERIORITY

ZANTAC 150 mg h.s. superior to cimetidine 400 mg h.s. for maintenance therapy of healed duodenal ulcer disease at 1 year.^{1,2}

¹These trials used the currently recommended dosing regimens of ZANTAC (150 mg h.s.) and cimetidine (400 mg h.s.). A comparison of other dosing regimens has not been studied. The studied dosing regimens are not equivalent with respect to the degree and duration of acid suppression or suppression of nocturnal acid. The superiority of ZANTAC over cimetidine in these trials indicates that the dosing regimen currently recommended for cimetidine is less likely to be as successful in maintenance therapy.

²Percent estimates are determined by life-table estimates. If crude-rate estimates were used, percentage of patients ulcer free after 1 year would be 88% for ZANTAC and 71% for cimetidine. All patients were permitted p.r.n. antacids for relief of pain.

The safety profile of ZANTAC is confirmed in over 13 years of use and over 190 million patient treatments worldwide.³ Low incidence of side effects. Headache, sometimes severe, was most frequently reported in controlled clinical trials, with an incidence rate not significantly different from placebo.³

An Athlete Dying Young

Arrhythmogenic Right Ventricular Dysplasia

Ralph B. Leonard, PhD, MD, David Alexander, MD, and James E. Byrum, Jr., MD

"To-day, the road all runners come,
Shoulder-high we bring you home,
And set you at your threshold down,
Townsmen of a stiller town."

—A.E. Housman, "To an Athlete Dying Young"

"Sudden cardiac death" refers specifically to cardiac arrest in patients with no history of known cardiac disease. Symptoms may (or may not) precede such death by minutes to hours. Patients younger than 35 years who experience sudden cardiac death often have congenital abnormalities of heart vessels, valves, or muscle (including muscle metabolism); older patients generally have severe coronary artery disease.¹

One of the obscure causes of sudden cardiac death, particularly in young, active patients, is arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia. This is a disorder with a strong genetic component^{2,3} in which there is partial replacement of the right ventricular myocardium by adipose and fibrous tissue. The condition has also been termed "arrhythmogenic right ventricular adiposis," "adipose dysplasia of the right ventricle," and "arrhythmogenic cardiomyopathy of the right ventricle."

Dr. Leonard is Associate Professor, Dr. Alexander is Fellow of Emergency Medical Services and Instructor, and Dr. Byrum is Assistant Professor, Department of Emergency Medicine, Bowman Gray School of Medicine, Wake Forest University Medical Center, Winston-Salem 27157.

Our Patient

A 25-year-old woman suddenly became weak while playing softball. She was taken off the playing field, and shortly thereafter became unconscious and pulseless. Cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) was initiated by two nurses who had been spectators at the ballgame. A rescue squad arrived within five minutes, at which time the patient had faint pulses and some respiratory effort. CPR was discontinued, but was quickly resumed because she again became pulseless and had agonal respirations. An Emergency Medical Services unit arrived; the patient was intubated and ventilated manually. Electrocardiographic monitoring revealed ventricular fibrillation; her heart was defibrillated and epinephrine was given via endotracheal tube. A sinus rhythm was established, but there were no palpable pulses. CPR was continued while she was removed to an ambulance. During her transport to the hospital, epinephrine was given intravenously, but her rhythm reverted to ventricular fibrillation. The paramedics gave lidocaine and epinephrine, and attempted four defibrillations. At the hospital, there were further resuscitation efforts, including placement of a central line, administration of more epinephrine and lidocaine, and repeated attempts at defibrillation. She could not be resuscitated.

Autopsy showed a markedly enlarged right ventricle infiltrated by yellow fatty tissue, particularly in the right ventricular outflow tract dorsal to the tricuspid valve. The coronary arteries were free of atheromatous change. The left ventricle was unremarkable. The microscopic evaluation of the right ventricle revealed well-differentiated adipose tissue replacing about 95% of the myocardium and extending almost to the endocardium.

Discussion

Fortunately, sudden cardiac death is not common, but it does attract a great deal of attention when it happens to a nationally known athlete or to a young person in the community engaged in athletics. Table 1, next page, lists some of the many causes of sudden cardiac death.⁴ For the remainder of this paper, we will concentrate on arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia, the disorder that resulted in the death of our young patient.

Pathology of Arrhythmogenic Right Ventricular Dysplasia

The clinical events associated with arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia were first described by Dalla-Volta, et al in 1961,⁵ but the pathologic characteristics had been described by Uhl nine years earlier.⁶ The right ventricular myocardium becomes replaced by varying amounts of adipose and fibrous tissue, the amount of replacement varying widely—from islands of adipose and fibrous tissue interspersed throughout the right ventricular myocardium to near total replacement of all muscle as in our patient. The right ventricle may be involved segmentally, usually in the right ventricular apex, the infundibulum, the outflow tract, the inferior wall, or the posterior wall. The septum is rarely involved.

Etiology

The cause of arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia is not known. Family studies suggest an autosomal dominant inheritance with incomplete penetrance and variable expression.² Presentation in families has been polymorphic, with both clinical (overt) and concealed (or mild) forms. The condition is more prevalent in males, the reported male:female ratio being 3:1.⁷

Clinical Presentation

Symptoms: Most patients are healthy young adults who suffer transient episodes of exercise-related ventricular tachycardia manifested as severe weakness or palpitations. More severe symptoms range from effort-related syncope to sudden death.⁸ Since the less serious forms of this disease may be asymptomatic or have only minor symptoms such as palpitations and a feeling of weakness, they may be difficult to diagnose. These mild forms complicate the general clinical picture, but whenever a family member is diagnosed as having the disease, then close relatives should be suspected of having a minor form of the disorder.

Physical Examination: It is important to know that up to 50% of patients with arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia will have totally normal physical findings.⁷ In the remaining patients, the most frequent cardiac finding is a widely split S₂ caused by prolonged ejection from the right ventricle. Murmurs are extremely rare.⁷

Chest Roentgenography: Chest roentgenograms may reveal right ventricular or right atrial enlargement, but usually are normal.⁷

Electrocardiography: In 70% of cases, electrocardiograms show a negative T-wave from V₁ to V₃ and even to V₆.⁸ Eighty percent of patients have re-entry dysrhythmias. Polymorphic ventricular premature contractions (Lown Class 2 with left bundle branch block morphology) may show up on 24-hour electrocardiogram (Holter) monitoring. Ventricular tachycardia is the mechanism of exercise-induced sudden cardiac death in these patients, and exercise testing often induces a sustained ventricular tachycardia in symptomatic patients.⁸

Angiography: Cardiac catheterization may reveal any of several morphological defects of the right ventricle that can help diagnose this dysplasia. Localized bulges, sometimes akinetic or dyskinetic, and small out-pouches persisting during systole suggest the disease, but are not absolutely diagnostic.⁹ Right ventricular enlargement was seen in 22 of the 24 patients studied by Marcus, et al.¹⁰ Other findings include deep fissuring of the anterior wall and small, conical out-pouches.

Echocardiography: Echocardiograms may visualize right ventricular dilatation or diastolic bulges, dyskinetic areas, and trabecular disarrangement. When present, these findings are diagnostically helpful, but with the milder forms of arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia, echocardiograms are normal or show only non-specific abnormalities.

Computed Tomography and Magnetic Resonance Imaging: Computed tomograms (or the even more sensitive magnetic resonance images) can identify fatty infiltration of the myocardium earlier than it can be detected by other diagnostic techniques. These tests are too expensive to use routinely, but should be considered for all patients with a family history of arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia. More study of these modalities and their correlation with echocardiography and angiography is needed.

Endocardial Biopsy: Endocardial biopsy can be of value, but only if specimens are acquired from the region of abnormal tissue. Most endocardial biopsy specimens come from the septum, which is seldom involved in this disease.

Patient Evaluation and Management

Because arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia usually is not diagnosed until the patient develops symptomatic sustained ventricular tachycardia, as did our patient, little is known about the milder, asymptomatic form of the disease. Therefore, it is difficult to determine whether ventricular tachycardia is the most common dysrhythmia of the disease. Even when ventricular tachycardia is not present, arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia still may be suspected from the presence of premature ventricular contractions with left branch bundle block pattern, or T-wave abnormalities in the V leads. The polymorphic nature of the premature ventricular contractions signifies the multiple potential sites from which dysrhythmias may arise.

Patients suspected of having arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia should undergo an echocardiogram to seek evidence of an enlarged, poorly contractile, thin-walled right ventricle. A 24-hour electrocardiogram recording may help by documenting multifocal ventricular ectopic beats.

If studies suggest the presence of arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia, the patient should undergo an electrophysiologic study to determine whether tachyarrhythmias can be triggered and if so, whether antiarrhythmic drugs are efficacious. Specific therapy should be undertaken by a cardiologist experienced in dealing with this disease.

Most patients respond fairly well to an antiarrhythmic drug regimen. Others are (or become) less responsive or even refractory to these agents and, in them, surgical approaches such as right ventricular disconnection, fulguration, or implantation of an automatic defibrillator may be worth trying.

“...this disease represents a highly lethal condition that can lurk in a young, seemingly healthy patient. An awareness of the subtle electrocardiographic changes and a suspicion of the condition are vital for its detection.”

Prognosis

The prognosis for these patients is as variable as the disease.^{11,12} A high percentage of those with sustained polymorphic ventricular tachycardia progress to ventricular fibrillation and death,⁸ but there are reports of sudden cardiac death in patients with sustained monomorphic ventricular tachycardia even though this rarely progresses to ventricular fibrillation. Syncope heralds a poor prognosis. Congestive heart failure is uncommon because usually only the outflow tract of the right heart is involved and not the left ventricle.

Conclusion

Arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia is a disease of unclear etiology. It is difficult to diagnose unless the physician is keenly aware of the subtle changes involved. Other than exercise-related palpitations and syncope, there are very few symptoms. The physical examination is essentially negative. However, as our case report shows, this disease represents a highly lethal condition that can lurk in a young, seemingly healthy patient. An awareness of the subtle electrocardiographic changes and a suspicion of the condition are vital for its detection.

It is important to determine whether sudden cardiac death of a young person was due to arrhythmogenic right ventricular dysplasia, because the disease is hereditary. Family members need referral to a cardiologist who is familiar with the disease, and genetic counseling, if indicated. □

The North Carolina Medical Journal is a medium for communication with and by members of the medical community of this state. The Journal will consider for publication articles relating to and illuminating medical science, practice, and history; editorials and opinion pieces; letters; personal accounts; poetry and whimsical musings; and photographs and drawings. Papers that relate to the present, past, or future practice of the health professions in North Carolina are especially pertinent, but manuscripts reflecting other perspectives or topics are welcomed. Prospective authors should feel free to discuss potential articles with the editors.

Manuscript Preparation

Authors should submit papers prepared according to the "Uniform Requirements for Manuscripts Submitted to Biomedical Journals" (N Engl J Med 1991;324:424-8) with the following exceptions: 1) no abstract is needed for an article; 2) no running title is needed; and 3) measurements must be reported in metric units, but use of the International System of Units (SI) is optional.

To summarize major elements: Submit two copies of text (including Letters to the Editor), double-spaced typed with one-inch margins, on one side of each sheet of paper. Title page should include addresses, and telephone and facsimile numbers of the corresponding author. Authors may submit a cover letter and a 3 1/2- or 5 1/4-inch floppy computer disc containing the text written in MS DOS compatible format (WordPerfect, Microsoft Word, Displaywrite, or ASCII).

Submit illustrations, in duplicate, in the form of high-quality color 35mm slides or 5-by-7-inch or 8-by-10-inch glossy photographs, or as black-and-white glossy prints (5-by-7-inch or 8-by-10-inch). Label all illustrations with author's name, number them sequentially according to their position in the text, and indicate the orientation of the images, if necessary. Do not write directly on the backs of prints. This can damage them.

Type figure legends, double-spaced, on a separate sheet of paper. Tables should be typed, double-spaced, one to a single sheet of paper. All tables must have titles and consecutive Arabic numbers.

Keep references to a minimum (no more than 15, preferably 10 or fewer), retaining those that document important points. The "Uniform Requirements" cited above contain the format for references. Authors are responsible for the accuracy and pertinence of all citations.

Avoid abbreviations entirely if possible; keep them to a minimum if not. When used, completely define abbreviations at the first point of usage in the text.

Manuscript Review and Editing

A medically qualified editor reads all manuscripts and, in most instances, sends them out for further review by one or more other members of the North Carolina Medical Society. Authors' cover letters should include a line that states that their submitted manuscripts are not under consideration for publication elsewhere. Decisions to publish or not are made by the editors, advised by the peer reviewers.

We encourage a relatively informal writing style since we believe this improves communication. Imagine yourself talking with your unseen audience—as long as this doesn't lead you to scientific or linguistic inaccuracy. Be brief, clear, simple, and precise.

We edit accepted manuscripts for clarity, style, and conciseness. Except for letters, authors receive a copy of the edited manuscript for their review and approval before publication. Manuscripts not accepted will not be returned.

Authors retain copyright to articles published in the North Carolina Medical Journal, but the North Carolina Medical Society copyrights the contents of each entire issue. Requests for permission to reprint all or any part of a published article must be submitted in writing to the address below and negotiated with the author and editor jointly. Reprinted material must carry a credit line identifying that it appeared in the North Carolina Medical Journal.

Clearing Athletes for Participation in Sports

Karl B. Fields, MD

In the 1960s the AMA's Committee on Medical Aspects of Sports published a "Bill of Rights for the School and College Athlete" endorsing the concept of medical evaluation before participation in sports.¹ The Sports Medicine Committee of the North Carolina Medical Society has reviewed this issue and, during the past four years, has revised the nature of the recommended evaluation and devised a form for recording it. A multidisciplinary task force, made up of representatives from the Department of Public Instruction, the North Carolina High School Athletic Association, multiple medical specialties, public health departments, the North Carolina Medical Society, and the State Superintendent's Advisory Committee, reviewed the work of the Sports Medicine Committee. The task force recommended certain further revisions which were subsequently endorsed by the Sports Medicine Committee (Appendix, pages 120-1). Currently the form is being reviewed by the State Board of Education and the Committee recommends its mandatory use by all state high school athletic programs.

Through this action the Sports Medicine Committee has chosen an evaluation tool that will identify individuals at serious risk from sports but that is still brief enough to be completed quickly. The preparticipation exam is comprised of three components, each with a separate section on the form: focused Medical History; limited Physical Examination; and Assessment and Recommendations.

Components of the Preparticipation Examination

The medical history consists of 13 questions, selected from published studies of preparticipation examinations,^{2,4} designed to reveal significant medical problems and to screen for conditions that might lead to catastrophic injury or death from sport-specific risks.

In addition to medical history questions, there is a one-page physical examination that places primary emphasis on measurement of blood pressure, and musculoskeletal and cardiovascular exams. Evaluation of these three areas has shown substantial utility in all studies of preparticipation examinations.^{5,6} Any additional items of physical examination are optional, to be done in follow-up of positive responses to historical questions or because individual physicians feel the need for a more comprehensive exam of a specific athlete. A checklist format speeds completion of the form, but there is space for written comments to elaborate on positive findings.

The final component of the exam is a section on assessments, recommendations, and reexaminations. This section reminds the physician of available options other than clearance or disqualification for all sports. For example, athletes can be cleared for certain sports but not others, or clearance may be deferred until any necessary rehabilitation or medical treatment is completed. In addition, a schedule for reexamination can be mandated for athletes who have problems (for example, borderline high blood pressure) that need follow-up in a shorter time span than one year.

Rationale of the Recommended Examination

Up to 70% of significant abnormalities detected by preparticipation examinations are uncovered by responses to the medical history.⁷ For this reason all questions in this section must be reviewed with the parent or guardian who signs the form. The athlete must not complete the examination process without this parental review to assure that important historical information is not overlooked. The areas screened by the history and physical fall into a few specific categories listed below.

Historical Items

Cardiovascular System. Questions 1, 2A, and 2B probe for symptoms of congenital cardiac problems that might lead to unexpected sudden death during athletic activity. The most common cause of sudden cardiac death in young athletes is hypertrophic cardiomyopathy.⁸ Since hypertrophic cardiomyopathy is an autosomal dominant condition, Question 1 probes for a family history of premature death. Questions 2A and 2B asks for symptoms of dizziness or syncope during exercise. These may be associated with hypertrophic cardiomyopathy but also with congenital anomalies of the coronary arteries, with arrhythmias, or with a prolonged QT syndrome.⁹ Question 2B asks whether the athlete has had a heart murmur; a positive response warrants a careful examination of the heart.

Pulmonary System. Question 3 asks about pulmonary problems, the most common being exercise-induced asthma. Studies of participants in the Olympic Games reveal that 10% of these elite athletes have exercise-induced asthma,¹⁰ but that only half of them are aware of it; studies of adolescents and high school athletes reveal percentages as high as 15% to 20%.^{11,12} The athletes often give a history of having "hay fever" or there is a family history of asthma and atopic problems. Persistent coughing after exercise is a clue; studies suggest that 85% of athletes with this symptom screen positive for exercise-induced asthma.¹³

Musculoskeletal System. Question 4 probes for a history of previous orthopedic injuries. Many athletes do not recognize that "fracture" means "broken bone." For this reason, asking whether they have ever worn a cast may help identify those who have had a serious injury that might not have been recognized as a broken bone. Orthopedic injuries are the most common reason for disqualification from sports participation and unstable knees rank as the most common of these. Because many athletes fail to go through adequate rehabilitation before returning to competition the next season,¹⁴ a positive response to Question 4 triggers additional questioning about what therapy the athlete received, what rehabilitation they had done, and what activities they have been able to do without difficulty.

Neurological System. Question 5 searches for a history of concussion. Recent guidelines published by the Colorado Medical Society point out the importance of careful attention to concussion and the serious sequelae of second concussions.¹⁵⁻¹⁷

The so called "second impact catastrophic head injury syndrome" accounts for a number of fatalities in contact and collision sports.¹⁶ Serious concussions may lead to ongoing symptoms for many months following injury. A history of a previous concussion triggers questions to clarify whether all symptoms have resolved. Any athlete who has not cleared all symptoms needs further work-up before participating.

Heat Illness. Question 6 relates to one of the serious problems that occurs in North Carolina. The high heat indexes that accompany the start of school in August and September pose extreme risks for heat illness. The risks are magnified in poorly conditioned athletes, but one predictor of subsequent problems is a previous heat-related syndrome.⁷ Any athlete who has a positive history of heat illness merits special monitoring on the field. Such medical supervision may be written on the preparticipation exam form as a condition to participation.

Drug Use, Psychological Problems, Confidential Matters. Question 7, an open-ended question, gives athletes a chance to explore confidential areas of concern with the doctor. Athletes rarely turn the discussion to illicit drug use, but they do ask questions about anabolic steroids. In addition, many athletes have unstable home situations, or tendencies toward depression, or other things that they wish to discuss with a team physician. Issues of sexuality are occasionally raised, but typically athletes ask about issues of adolescence that embarrass them—like acne or obesity. In any case, Question 7 is intended to allow athletes to discuss confidential matters and develop rapport with the physician but does not require writing down the specific nature of the problem.

General Medical Problems. Questions 8 through 13 address issues of general medical care. Chronic illnesses require careful evaluation if we are to have safe sports participation; specific medications used by the athlete should be listed on the preparticipation form. Question 11 asks about lack of paired organs because, while lack of a paired organ does not preclude sports participation, the absence of an eye, kidney, or testicle increases the risks of playing a contact sport like football. Question 12 reviews eye wear, since protective lenses or special frames may be needed for a given sport. Knowing immunization and allergy status allows safer treatment should an athlete develop a related problem.

Physical Examination

Blood Pressure. Blood pressure needs to be measured by an experienced individual and adjustments made for the age and body habitus of the individual. For example, 10% of athletes older than 13 have systolic pressures in excess of 130 and diastolic pressure in excess of 80;¹⁸ after repeat measurements, 5% of adolescents older than age 13 qualify as having mild hypertension. The blood pressure readings recorded on preparticipation exams consistently show lower percentages than this. This may reflect inaccurate blood pressure measurements or the possibility that multiple determinations are needed to identify adolescents with mild hypertension. Regardless, blood pressure measurements higher than 130/80 merit repeating during the season. Requests for such repeated measurements can be included on the preparticipation form as a specific recommendation. Physicians should also keep in mind that intermittently elevated blood pressure may be a marker for substance abuse.

Musculoskeletal System. The second critical area for examination is the musculoskeletal exam. Some preparticipation studies show that 50% of disqualifications are related to knee problems.⁵ A check for anterior cruciate stability (Lachman's test, Table 1) and for collateral ligament and meniscus integrity are appropriate. Observation of muscle atrophy or significant joint malalignment is important since these can play a role in less serious knee problems like patellofemoral stress syndrome.

The other two commonly injured joints are the ankle and shoulder. Detection of ankle laxity should lead to functional testing such as having the athlete stand with the foot in an inverted position or balance on one foot with eyes closed. Shoulder problems, particularly supraspinatus impingements, are common in athletes whose sports require throwing. Careful screening for instability, subluxation, or apprehension are also needed (Table 1). If ankle or shoulder demonstrate significant problems, the athlete needs further work-up before full participation is allowed. In general, a careful orthopedic exam of the knee, ankle, and shoulder suffices to screen for most abnormalities. Careful observation, looking for a symmetry malalignment, or any loss of active range of motion constitutes the remainder of the screening musculoskeletal examination.

Cardiovascular System. The cardiovascular exam focuses primarily on detection of pathological murmurs. All diastolic murmurs are abnormal, but only some systolic murmurs are. The systolic murmur of hypertrophic cardiomyopathy increases in intensity when the athlete goes from a lying to a standing position. The murmur results from subaortic obstruction and the standing position, by decreasing the return of blood to the heart, increases the degree of obstruction. Two conditions that are missed with some frequency include atrial septal defects (a systolic "ejection" murmur often accompanied by a fixedly split second heart sound) and patent ductus arteriosus (with a continuous, "machinery" murmur).

An irregular heartbeat detected on examination warrants ECG testing. Should irregular beats prove to be premature ventricular contractions, additional evaluation may be needed to exclude high-risk conditions. Athletes with significant ectopy should be asked about recent viral infections because of the association of viral myocarditis and death during subsequent athletic activity.

General Exam. The remainder of the exam should be tailored to the individual athlete. Some physicians feel most comfortable doing a "complete" physical; others limit the exam since they rarely detect unanticipated problems in the relatively healthy group of adolescents who participate in high school sports. Specific sports do dictate additional evaluation. For

Knee

Lachman's test of the anterior cruciate ligament: This is a variation of the anterior drawer test. The knee is placed in 15 to 20 degrees of flexion, the femur is stabilized with the superior hand, and the lower hand pulls forward on the tibia. Failure to feel a solid endpoint suggests an unstable knee.

Collateral ligament test: Varus and valgus stresses are applied to the knee in full extension and in 20 degrees of flexion. An unstable knee opens more than the same test applied to the uninjured side.

Shoulder

Apprehension test of anterior subluxation/dislocation: The shoulder is abducted to 90 degrees and externally rotated. As the examiner slowly applies force to increase the degree of external rotation the patient will develop a look of apprehension if the shoulder is prone to either subluxation or dislocation.

Supraspinatus test: The shoulder is abducted to 90 degrees and rotated forward 30 degrees with the thumb pointed down (empty beer can position). Pain or weakness in this position suggests injury to the supraspinatus tendon.

Ankle

Inversion test: Inversion stress placed on the ankle. Failure to reach an endpoint, defined by firm resistance to the examiner's inversion stress, constitutes a positive exam and usually indicates significant laxity of anterior and lateral calcaneofibular ligaments.

One foot balance test: The athlete balances on one foot with eyes closed. Failure to balance suggests lack of adequate proprioception following an injury.

Inverted walking test: The athlete walks on the outer edge of the foot with the ankle inverted. Excessive pain or inability to perform this maneuver suggests ongoing ankle injury.

example, examination of the skin of wrestlers is important because of the contagious nature of Herpes simplex (a.k.a. Herpes gladiatorum) and other skin diseases.¹⁹ Swimmers should be examined for chronic otitis externa. And a search for hepatosplenomegaly in athletes participating in contact and collision sports may lessen the risk of catastrophic organ rupture.

Laboratory Tests. Current national recommendations do not include laboratory studies as part of the preparticipation examination.⁷ Routine urinalyses are excluded because studies do not show that an abnormal urinalysis in young athletes indicates significant genitourinary tract pathology. Hemoglobin determination detects some anemia, usually from iron deficiency in female athletes, but not of a degree that would limit athletic participation. Therefore, measurements of hemoglobin level, urinalyses, and other laboratory tests are deferred to the athlete's primary care physician who can better assess what is needed and follow-up on any abnormalities.

Summary

The North Carolina Medical Society's Sports Medicine Committee has reviewed current U.S. literature on preparticipation examinations and adopted a documentation form that fits the specific needs of our state. In spite of a recently published comprehensive monograph on preparticipation physical evaluation, no national consensus exists about whether comprehensive preparticipation exams or brief, focused examinations are better. With this in mind, we limited medical history questions to those determined by previous studies to identify specific problems. Also included are evaluations of blood pressure, musculoskeletal, and cardiovascular systems since studies have shown significant yield from these. The same studies find little benefit from the remainder of a comprehensive physical assessment.

The recommended evaluation represents a minimal standard and addresses the core areas likely to prevent athletes from participating safely in sports. No recommended exam could cover all issues that affect school-age athletes—health prevention, adolescent development, general medical care, and psychological stresses—but physicians can use the recording form as a starting point and incorporate a more extensive evaluation into the assessment of athletes found to be at increased risk. Consistent use of this examination should promote better detection of sport-specific risks related to cardiovascular disorders, asthma, musculoskeletal problems, concussions, heat-related problems, and general medical problems.

The Sports Medicine Committee wants to promote physical activity. Before disqualifying athletes physicians should remember that the disqualification rate in published studies averages only 1%.¹⁴ When questions about the need for disqualification arise, consultation may be advisable. Since better levels of fitness predict good health and longevity, we hope that use of the preparticipation examination will encourage athletic participation rather than to focus on the rare athlete who must be disqualified.^{20,21} □

Hypothyroidism

Andrew S. Lamb, MD, FACP

Over the years I have seen several patients with hypothyroidism that presented in very unusual ways. As other observers have noted, such patients represent diagnostic dilemmas until the doctor at least considers the diagnosis. I felt that a review of the many faces of hypothyroidism would be of particular interest to primary caregivers—those on the “front lines” and thus most likely to see patients before their hypothyroidism is diagnosed. It is my hope that this review will remind us of medicine’s diversity.

The clinical condition we call hypothyroidism results from a variety of structural or functional abnormalities all leading to insufficient production of thyroid hormone. Hypothyroidism may be primary, due to a disorder of the gland itself, secondary, due to pituitary dysfunction, or tertiary due to hypothalamic failure.¹ It is a common endocrine disorder which, under ordinary circumstances, manifests characteristic clinical signs and symptoms.

The prevalence of primary hypothyroidism ranges from 1.0% to 10%, depending on the population surveyed. Typical signs and symptoms are present in only 25%-75% of these patients; the others having “masked” or atypical symptoms. Hypothyroidism can sometimes be extremely difficult to diagnose because of the wide variety of associated symptoms, the onset of which may occur insidiously over months or even years. In the elderly, the manifestations hypothyroidism are often mistaken for “aging,” and there is a tendency to look for the “classic” symptoms and signs: mental and physical sluggishness; weight gain; dry, coarse skin; cold intolerance; constipation. The picture becomes confusing when only one organ system is predominantly involved, or when the clinical findings are masked by concomitant medical illness. The assumption that hypothyroidism has a typical presentation can be hazardous.^{2,3} In this article I review the varied manifestations of hypothyroidism by organ system.

Manifestations of Hypothyroidism

Nervous System. The effects of hypothyroidism on the brain and peripheral nervous system are diverse (Table 1). Progressive forgetfulness, inattentiveness, drowsiness, and lethargy, while common, may be attributed to advancing age. Cerebellar signs include an ataxic gait and dysarthric speech. The central nervous system effects may be mistaken for multiple sclerosis, myasthenia gravis, or spinal cord tumors, or they can be so diverse that the patient is labeled hysterical.³

A peripheral neuropathy, either motor or sensory, but generally with distal sensory involvement, may be the earliest manifestation of hypothyroidism. In fact, abnormal nerve conduction velocities may be detected before clinical symptoms are present.⁴ Carpal tunnel syndrome, deafness due to impairment of the auditory component of cranial nerve VIII, or vertigo and tinnitus due to involvement of the vestibular component can occur.¹

Psychiatric Symptoms. Disturbances of endocrine function are common causes of “psychiatric” disease. Psychiatric symptoms may be the earliest or most prominent manifestation of hypothyroidism (Table 2), and between 5%-15% of myxedema patients have overt psychosis ("myxedema madness"). Rapidly developing myxedema can be associated with generalized agitation, progressive disorientation, persecutory delusions, paranoia, auditory or visual hallucinations, or intermittent bouts of lethargy alternating with extreme restlessness. Distorted perceptions of the special senses—hearing, taste, vision, and smell—can also occur.⁵

Kidney. The only disturbance of renal function is a multifactorial defect in water excretion (Table 3). The final result is a dilutional hyponatremia that corrects when the patient is given thyroxine. Serum creatinine and creatinine clearance are usually normal.^{6,7}

Heart. Pericardial effusion is common, occurring in up to 30% of hypothyroid patients. However, it infrequently results in either symptoms or hemodynamic consequences. Cardiac tamponade is rare because the pericardial effusion forms slowly and the pericardium is able to distend.⁸ The pericardial effusion arises (as do other effusions seen in hypothyroidism) through several pathogenetic mechanisms (Table 4).⁹ Pericardial effusion is rarely large enough to cause radiological cardiomegaly, but may combine with other conditions found in the setting of hypothyroidism (myxedematous involvement of the myocardium, advancing age, hypertension, ischemic heart disease) to cause cardiomegaly. Pericardial effusion usually resolves after thyroxine replacement.⁸ All patients presenting with pericardial effusion should have hypothyroidism ruled out before any invasive diagnostic measures are performed.

Hypothyroidism also produces reversible myocardial dysfunction, the magnitude of which correlates with the clinical severity of the hypothyroidism. Severe dysfunction may result from structural disintegration and myxedematous infiltration of the myocardium as well as from the metabolic effect of low serum concentration of thyroxine. Replacement therapy completely reverses such myocardial dysfunction.

Finally, asymmetric septal hypertrophy is another unusual and reversible manifestation of hypothyroidism.¹⁰

Hematologic System. Hematologic abnormalities are a common and early manifestation of hypothyroidism. Anemias (including normocytic/normochromic, hypochromic/microcytic, or macrocytic forms), disorders of hemostasis, and anisocytosis and acanthocytosis have all been described. The overall incidence of anemia approximates 30% (nearly two-thirds of whom have macrocytosis). Macrocytic anemia does not necessarily indicate Vitamin B₁₂ deficiency although this is possible and should be looked for (pernicious anemia is 20 times more common in patients with hypothyroidism than in the general population¹¹).

Bleeding time can be prolonged secondary to multiple coagulation factor deficiencies such as low levels of factors VII, VIII, IX, and XI, either singly or in combination. Low platelet adhesiveness with normal platelet aggregation (resembling the laboratory features of von Willebrand's Disease) are common as well, and hypothyroidism is listed as a cause of acquired von Willebrand's Disease. Treatment with thyroxine generally resolves the abnormalities of hemostasis.¹²

The blood clotting system of anyone suspected of hypothyroidism should be tested before the patient undergoes surgery.

Endocrine System. Loss of libido and occult adrenal insufficiency may accompany hypothyroidism.¹ Prolonged and heavy menstrual bleeding can occur early in hypothyroidism; with severe myxedema, amenorrhea, anovulation, and infertility can be seen.

The pituitary gland can be affected by hypothyroidism. Galactorrhea (often accompanied by hyperprolactinemia) and an exaggerated rise of serum prolactin in response to administration of thyroid releasing hormone can occur, and there may even be a compensatory pituitary enlargement with visual field defects, leading to a mistaken diagnosis of prolactinoma.¹³ Fortunately pituitary failure is rare.¹⁴

Skin. Cutaneous manifestations (rough, scaly, dry, sallow skin) are well described but lesser known findings include atrophic epidermis, hyperkeratosis of the stratum corneum, and thin, grooved nails.²

quently noted and particularly involve the knees, metacarpophalangeal, and metatarsophalangeal joints. Myalgias, stiffness, muscle cramps, proximal myopathy, calcium pyrophosphate dihydrate crystal deposition ("pseudo-gout") and a destructive arthropathy can also be seen.¹⁵

Serosal effusions present in hypothyroidism can occur into any body cavity. Peritoneal, pericardial, and pleural effusions are the most common, but middle ear, joint, and uveal effusions can occur.¹⁶

Respiratory System. Pulmonary manifestations include dyspnea on exertion, pleural effusions, alveolar hypoventilation, reduced oxygen diffusion capacity, and blunted ventilatory response to hypoxia and hypercarbia. This blunted response, if complicated by other factors that adversely affect breathing, may lead to overt respiratory failure and inability to wean from the ventilator.¹⁷

Phrenic nerve dysfunction, upper airway obstruction, and obstructive sleep apnea can also be seen. Sleep apnea is sometimes the only symptom of hypothyroidism. Proposed causes of sleep apnea include: narrowing of the upper airways by deposition of mucoprotein in the tongue and oropharynx; central abnormalities of ventilatory control; and hypothyroid myopathy of the upper airway.¹⁸

Gastrointestinal Tract. Gastrointestinal dysfunction due to hypothyroidism includes: hypomotility; constipation; intestinal pseudo-obstruction (myxedema ileus) or megacolon (sometimes leading to intestinal perforation); ascites; mucosal atrophy; gastric achlorhydria; and hypotonia of the esophagus, stomach, gallbladder, small intestine, colon, uterus, and bladder.^{1,3}

Laboratory Abnormalities. Non-endocrine laboratory abnormalities include: elevated serum lactate dehydrogenase (LDH) concentrations with an isoenzyme profile (increased LDH₁ and LDH₂) suggestive of myocardial infarction; markedly increased serum creatinine kinase of MM origin; and increased serum aspartate aminotransferase levels. Increased serum concentrations of uric acid, carcinoembryonic antigen; elevated cerebrospinal fluid protein; and increased red blood cell sedimentation rate can be seen.¹⁵

Diagnosis of Hypothyroidism

The diagnosis of primary hypothyroidism is easy once it is considered. The single most useful laboratory test is the serum TSH, in particular, the ultra-sensitive TSH assay. TSH is invariably increased in primary hypothyroidism and usually normal or undetectable in pituitary or hypothalamic hypothyroidism. A decrease in serum thyroxine, especially the free thyroxine or free thyroxine index, is common to all varieties of hypothyroidism. Some patients who appear clinically euthyroid display laboratory evidence of early thyroid failure (subclinical hypothyroidism) in the form of low-normal serum thyroxine concentrations with supranormal TSH levels.

Conclusions

I have tried to convey the lessons I have learned from several years of watching for this common, and eminently treatable but often overlooked, disorder. Specific symptoms or signs must be actively searched for and the diagnostic possibility of hypothyroidism in its many and varied forms at least entertained during the evaluation of a patient, or the diagnosis will be missed. The tendency to depend on the presence of "classic" symptoms and signs makes the unusual presentations more difficult to recognize. I hope that this paper will sharpen your understanding of the many faces of hypothyroidism and allow for earlier and more timely diagnosis. □

Families in Pain

FAMILY VIOLENCE

Every day we hear stories of children being abused, women being battered and elderly persons being mistreated. What is happening in the family? What are the reasons for this kind of behavior? To try and respond to these and other questions many concerned groups across the country are meeting, forming coalitions, task forces and exchanging information. The North Carolina Medical Society has formed a Domestic Violence Task Force to address this growing problem and particularly to see how physicians can help in the identification and treatment of their patients who are victims of this type of violence. The following material describes the different types of abuse and violence that occurs in the home and provides information on how affected people can seek help.

What is family violence?

Family violence is the mistreatment of one family member by another. It includes a range of violent and threatening behaviors. Battering includes physical violence—restraining, pushing, hitting, kicking, choking, breaking bones, use of weapons and even murder. It includes sexual violence—coercion, rape, forced sex with other parties, use of foreign objects and mutilation. It includes emotional violence—humiliation, threats, isolation, intimidation, economic abuse.

How prevalent is it?

Family violence has reached epidemic proportions in the country. According to the FBI, approximately 2-6 million women are battered every year in the U.S. In North Carolina it is expected that more than 56,000 reports of child maltreatment will be made this year. It is estimated that over 33,000 elderly and disabled adults could be abused this year in our state.

Who are it victims?

Women

Violence against women by their husbands or intimate partner crosses all socioeconomic boundaries—race, religion, class, ethnic group, educational level, sexual preference and occupation. It happens in rich neighborhoods and poor neighborhoods. It happens to unemployed women and professional women.

This violence is committed by men who frequently have a poor self image and believe that through controlling their partner, they can gain a greater control over their own lives. Most of these men are only violent toward their intimate partners and frequently only within the privacy of their own homes. As they experience no negative consequences for the violence, they find it an effective means of getting what they want from their partner. The social sanctions and supports for violence prevent men from seeing the violence as a problem.

Battered women may stay in or return to a battering relationship for some time. This is difficult for other people to understand. The reasons are varied and complex. Usually the violence has not started with a full-blown battering episode, but has begun with the batterer steadily taking more and more control over his partner. By the time a woman realizes the relationship has become abusive there are often many barriers she must overcome in order to leave and start a new life.

The first obstacle is fear. Fear of her batterer, fear of starting over, fear of the unknown. Her batterer may have threatened her with even greater physical harm if she tries to leave and his actions have shown that his threats are to be taken seriously. He may have threatened to kill her, the children or himself. She certainly knows that leaving will not be simply the end of it. Many battered women are stalked and harassed for years after leaving their batterers. Some are killed.

Another obstacle to leaving is children. In spite of what her batterer has done to her, he is the father of her children. From every medium she is given the message that children need their father and it is her responsibility to keep the marriage together for their sake. He also may have made threats to her regarding the children—that he will take them and she will never see them again, that he will get custody or he will report her to the authorities as an unfit mother. Other barriers to leaving are economic and religious ones. Leaving may often mean being thrust into immediate poverty. Many women also have strong religious convictions regarding their marriage and the vows they took. This presents her with a difficult spiritual choice.

Children

Incidents of child abuse and neglect occur in every social and economic class involving people from every walk of life. Most people who have abused or neglected their children did not intend to cause any harm. Sometimes a crisis can temporarily affect a person's ability to cope with the stresses of parenting. Many of these parents were mistreated themselves as children, and do not know other ways to handle discipline. Many use drugs or alcohol to excess, and sometimes lose control of their behavior. Many are overwhelmed by economic or other social pressures, and take out their frustrations on their children. Some have emotional problems. Some are ashamed to ask for help and others don't know what help is available or how to get it. Some do not know reasonable expectations for children's behaviors. Only a few parents are intentionally cruel to their children.

Children who have been chronically abused or neglected may show some of the following signs:

- bruises in areas not normally subjected to bruising, such as on the face, non-bony areas of the arms, legs, and/or torso;
- clothing exceptionally filthy, or consistently inappropriate for the weather;
- child seems unusually afraid of one or both parents;
- child frequently seems tired, without energy;
- child has "vacant" stare
- child is habitually absent from school, to allow for healing of injuries;
- child displays extreme behavior, such as aggressiveness or withdrawal; or
- child has consistent problems in getting along with others.

Children go through normal developmental stages in which they are more interested in sexuality, both their own and that of other people. Parents would be wise to become familiar with these developmental stages. However, both boys and girls who are being sexually abused do demonstrate behaviors which warrant further investigation. Some of these signs are:

- a sudden change in behavior, such as discomfort with a particular person;
- a change in eating patterns;
- a change in school performance;
- physical signs of sexual abuse, such as irritation around the genitals or rectum, or an abnormal discharge;

- unexplained, recurring urinary tract infections;
- increased, obsessive masturbation; or
- play activities which have sexually inappropriate themes.

Elderly

Mistreatment of the elderly person may include physical, psychological or financial abuse or neglect, and it may be intentional or unintentional. Intentional mistreatment involves a conscious and deliberate attempt to inflict harm or injury, such as verbal abuse or battering; unintentional mistreatment occurs when an inadvertent action results in harm to the elderly person. Unintentional mistreatment is usually due to ignorance, inexperience or a lack of ability or desire of the caretaker to provide proper care.

Types of abuse:

1. Physical abuse involves acts of violence that may result in pain, injury, impairment or disease. Examples include:
 - Pushing, striking, slapping or pinching;
 - Force-feeding;
 - Incorrect positioning;
 - Improper use of physical restraints or medications; or
 - Sexual coercion or assault (sexual contact or exposure without the older person's consent or when the older person is incapable of giving consent).
2. Physical neglect is characterized by failure of the caregiver to provide the goods or services that are necessary for optimal functioning or to avoid harm. This may include:
 - Withholding of health maintenance care, including adequate meals or hydration, physical therapy or hygiene;
 - Failure to provide physical aids such as eyeglasses, hearing aids or false teeth; or
 - Failure to provide safety precautions.
3. Psychological abuse is conduct that causes mental anguish in an older person. This includes:
 - Verbal berating, harassment or intimidation;
 - Threats of punishment or deprivation;
 - Treating the older person like an infant; or
 - Isolating the older person from family, friends or activities.
4. Psychological neglect is the failure to provide a dependent elderly individual with social stimulation. This may involve:
 - Leaving the older person alone for long periods of time;
 - Ignoring the older person or giving him or her the "silent treatment"; or

- Failing to provide companionship, changes in routing, news or information.

You should be concerned about an older or disabled adult who:

- Needs medical care and is not getting it;
- Has a change in the way he or she looks, e.g., the adult may lose a lot of weight or lose interest in keeping clean or dressing neatly;

- Has a change in the way he or she acts, e.g., the adult may become depressed, withdrawn, forgetful, suicidal or violent;
- Does not have enough food or a safe home;
- Is not able to cook, eat, bathe or dress, and there is nobody to help;
- Has unexplained bruises or other injuries;
- Does not buy necessary things such as food or medicine even though he or she should have enough money; or
- Has been asked to sign papers without understanding what they mean. ☐

Millions Victimized by Family Members Every Year!

Are you concerned about the effects of family violence and victimization within your community?

Become an advocate within your community for the prevention of family violence.

Violence among family members has reached staggering proportions. Every year more than 2 million cases of child abuse and neglect are reported, between 2 and 4 million women are battered by their spouses, and between 700,000 and 1.1 million of the elderly population are abused.

The American Medical Association has formed a National Coalition of Physicians Against Family Violence. Through the Coalition the American Medical Association hopes to involve you in activities that address issues of child abuse, sexual assault, domestic violence and elder abuse because you have the unique ability to identify the symptoms, first-hand. By joining the National Coalition you will be showing your concern about the effects of family violence and victimization, and will become a committed advocate within your community for the prevention of family violence.

Through the Coalition you will:

- be informed about local contacts and referrals
- become aware of local and regional resources
- be provided with information regarding model educational programs
- become aware of treatment guidelines and protocols.
- have access to newsletters, public education materials and other publications
- receive an official membership card and frameable poster alerting your patients of your interest in and concern for this problem.

The only cost to you is your commitment to help curb this problem. Simply complete the membership application form below and mail to the Department of Mental Health, American Medical Association, 515 N. State Street, Chicago, IL 60610.

The Pattern and Cost of Hospital Care for Persons With HIV/AIDS in Guilford County, NC, 1987-1991

Sherry Allison-Cooke, MA

During the first decade of the Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (AIDS) epidemic, most Americans felt comfortably "safe," believing they were sheltered from infection with the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) by virtue of their geographic residence or sexual orientation. The disease was preponderant only in a few major metropolitan centers—San Francisco, New York City, Los Angeles, Miami—and in a specific demographic group—young adult homosexual males. Now, as a society, we have finally recognized that the epidemic has spread well beyond these confines—to smaller and smaller communities, to heterosexuals, to women, and even to children. The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) lists nearly 100 U.S. cities and towns in which more than 125 cases have been reported, including many conservative and mainstream communities of modest size such as Austin, Texas (1,092 cases), Dayton, Ohio (341), and Tulsa, Oklahoma (312).¹

Between October 1, 1991, and September 30, 1992, heterosexual contact and/or injectable drug use accounted for more than one-third of all reported cases. Women represented 13% of new cases during that period, and the number of pediatric cases now exceeds 4,000.² These trends are expected to continue because they reflect the nature of the worldwide epidemic more accurately than the earlier, narrow focus of the disease in the U.S. By September 30, 1992, North Carolina had recorded 2,751 cases of AIDS.

The epidemic is relatively widespread but is somewhat overrepresented in Guilford County (Greensboro, High Point) where 5.2% of North Carolinians reside, but 8.2% of persons with AIDS live. Throughout North Carolina the rate of transmission is growing much more swiftly among African Americans, injectable drug users, and heterosexuals than other groups.³

Given these realities, community leaders in Guilford County recognized that information about the extent of the local epidemic would allow them to determine how to meet current and future needs. Under the auspices of the Foundation of Greater Greensboro, they formed the Guilford Community AIDS Partnership, a consortium that includes representatives from the business, religious, hospital, other medical, social service, and ethnic communities. Among other activities, the Partnership has funded two studies of HIV/AIDS in the county, has conducted an intense strategic planning effort, and has sponsored a leadership forum to introduce the dimensions of the problem to the community.

The findings reported here are drawn from one of the two studies funded by the Partnership, in cooperation with three hospitals serving Guilford County. They contracted with the National Perinatal Information Center (NPIC) in Providence, Rhode Island, to conduct a strategic planning effort through its "Project: Community Response to HIV/AIDS." The study formed a critical part of the overall strategic planning process of the hospitals and the Partnership. It identified and quantified changes in volume and characteristics of hospitalizations of patients afflicted by the disease, the cost of their care, and shifts in practice patterns.

Data and Methods

NPIC is a non-profit hospital membership organization involved in health services research, health policy analysis, and community planning. NPIC staff, in cooperation with High Point Regional Hospital, Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital, and Wesley Long Community Hospital, studied all discharges of persons with HIV/AIDS during a four-year period. Once the hospitals purged all confidential information, abstracted discharge summary data were sent to NPIC for analysis using both quantitative and qualitative measures. The goal was to assist the Guilford Community AIDS Partnership group in analyzing their unique environment, identifying key issues, prioritizing objectives, and developing steps to address these objectives.

Data reported in this study are based on discharges from all three Guilford County hospitals for the period July 1, 1987, to June 30, 1991. In 1987-1988 there were 42 discharges (14% of total); 1988-1989, 61 (20%); 1989-1990, 96 (31%); and in 1990-1991, 111 (36%). The analysis investigates and compares patient characteristics, patterns of resource consumption, and trends over time. Items analyzed are displayed in Tables 1 and 2. Total charges refer to total dollars billed per hospitalization. Diagnoses are designated according to five-digit codes from the International Classification of Diseases, 9th Edition, Clinical Modifications (ICD-9-CM). The following diagnostic codes were used to identify hospital discharges to be included in this study:

1. Symptomatic AIDS (042.00-042.99)
2. HIV causing other specified conditions such as the AIDS-related complex, ARC, (043.00-043.99)
3. HIV not otherwise specified (044.00-044.99)
4. Asymptomatic HIV positive (795.8)
5. Pneumocystosis (PCP) (136.3)

Findings

The three hospitals discharged 310 persons with HIV/AIDS between July 1, 1987 and June 30, 1991 (Table 1). The overwhelming proportion of hospitalized patients were adults aged 20 to 49 (85%) and most (54%) were between 30 to 39. Since most pediatric HIV care is provided elsewhere, there were very few discharges for children; the 14 recorded cases (4%) were all one year of age or less. It seems likely that these represent initial diagnoses in newborns or infants whose subsequent hospitalizations occurred at Duke, the University of North Carolina, or Bowman Gray medical centers. Surprisingly, only one teen (age 19) was hospitalized during the four-year study period; this individual is included in the aged 20 to 29 category for analysis.

Three-quarters of HIV/AIDS patients discharged during the study period were male, and 62% were African Americans. Only 9% were currently married; 78% were single; and 13% were separated, divorced, or widowed. More than two-thirds (68%) of patients were Greensboro residents; 12% resided in High Point; 5%, in other parts of Guilford County; and 15% were from out of county.

A majority (162) of cases came into the hospital as routine admissions, but 137 were admitted through the emergency room, one was a newborn, and four patients were transferred from other hospitals. The most common HIV-defining diagnoses were AIDS (44%) and ARC (41%). During the four-year period, 17% of the patients admitted with HIV/AIDS died during hospitalization. None of the newborns or infants died, but 14% of the 19-29 year-olds and 20% of older patients did.

Resource Use

Overall, the length of hospital stay and billed charges for care in Guilford County were much lower than national estimates of inpatient resource utilization by persons with HIV/AIDS. Figure 1, page 131, depicts average length of stay according to a number of factors. Average length of stay was longer for males, for those aged 30 or older, for African Americans, for AIDS than ARC, for Medicaid patients, and for patients who eventually died.

Terminally ill patients accounted for only 18% of discharges, but for 24% of total days of inpatient care.

As displayed in Table 2, 55% of Guilford County HIV/AIDS patients stayed in the hospital for one week or less. However, 61 (20%) were hospitalized for longer than two weeks, and 11 patients (3.5%) stayed more than one month. The average hospital stay for the 310 admissions was 9.3 days; there were 2,876 total days of hospital care during the four-year study period.

Most patients (56%) incurred bills of less than $5,000; only 14 (5%) exceeded $20,000. The average charge per hospitalization was nearly $7,300, and over four years the total billed charges for HIV/AIDS inpatients approached $2.3 million. Medicaid financed the care of 41% of these patients; 8% were uninsured; and care for the remaining 51% was covered by a variety of public and private insurance plans including HMOs, Blue Cross/Blue Shield, Medicare, and other programs.

The number of HIV/AIDS discharges increased annually from 42 in 1987-1988 to 111 in 1990-1991. Table 1 shows trends in patient characteristics during this period. The age distribution of patients with AIDS appears to be slowly equalizing; during our study, more new cases appeared in younger and older categories while those aged 30 to 39 declined (from 71% of all inpatient discharges in 1987-1988 to 53% in 1990-1991). The proportion of female patients increased from 14% to 23%, and that of African Americans (both sexes) even more, from 38% of total discharges in 1987-1988 to 75% in 1990-1991.

Hospitalizations in Guilford County of out-of-county residents nearly tripled from 7% to 19% of the total, and admissions of High Point residents more than doubled (from 7% to 15%). Admissions from the emergency room, already at a high level, further increased during the fourth year of the study period. This reflects not only the critical nature of HIV disease but the continuing problem of access to primary and referral care. Our data also reflect, indirectly, a movement toward earlier identification of HIV disease because diagnoses of ARC/HIV+ increased from one-third to one-half of all discharges. The proportion of patients who were married and the annual death rates remained relatively stable across the four years.

Table 2 shows that the proportion of very short hospitalizations increased dramatically during the study period, and that of especially long hospitalizations declined. Stays of 0-4 days rose from 16% to 42%, and stays of more than one week decreased from 69% to 37% of annual discharges. Average length of stay dropped dramatically from 12.4 days to 9.2, to 9.6, to 7.9 days during sequential years of the four-year period.

As a result of shortened stays, the total number of hospital days utilized in 1990-1991 actually dropped (to 878 days from 917 days in 1989-1990) despite an increase in total discharges from 96 to 111. There was a similar downward trend for charges. In 1987-1988, only 13% of HIV/AIDS hospital bills were less than $2,000 but by 1990-1991 33% were; bills of $10,000 or more dropped from 26% to 15%. As a result, total charges billed by Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital (where most patients were hospitalized) actually declined between 1989-1990 and 1990-

1991 despite an increase from 85 to 92 discharges. Countywide, the average charge per HIV/AIDS discharge dropped from $7,620 to $5,948 between 1978-1988 and 1990-1991.

Payment of bills by Medicaid increased slightly from 45% to 52%. Other insurance coverage dropped somewhat from 50% to 40%, but not uniformly because Medicare and HMO coverage, though small, grew.

Discussion

Our analysis of discharge data from the three Guilford County hospitals confirm and quantify many anecdotal reports that the NPIC gleaned from previous qualitative analyses conducted as part of "Project: Community Response to HIV/AIDS." These anecdotal reports emphasize the in-roads that the epidemic has made among African Americans, the increasing share of the burden of care assumed by the smaller institutions surveyed, and the continued need of patients with AIDS to get care in hospital emergency rooms.

An area of special concern in Guilford County is the growing impact of HIV/AIDS within the African American community. The proportion of African American patients hospitalized for HIV/AIDS doubled between 1987-1988 and 1990-1991 (from 38% to 77%). The number of African Americans admitted ballooned from 16 to 84, during a time in which admissions of Caucasians remained basically unchanged (26 in 1987-1988 and 25 in 1990-1991).

So important is the factor of race in our analysis, that it overshadows most others. In fact, the increased HIV prevalence among African Americans provides the key to many of the other study findings, including the observed increase in infection of women, children, persons aged 50 and older, High Point residents, and those using Medicaid as a source of payment. African Americans accounted for 12 of the 14 pediatric admissions and for 96% of female patients.

At the same time, the shift toward shorter, less expensive confinements can be attributed mainly to Caucasian patients. The average length of hospital stay and charges for African-American patients remain high, correlating with surveillance data and with anecdotal reports that African Americans with HIV/AIDS in Guilford County are more likely to have used injectable drugs, to have generally poor health status, and sometimes to delay treatment until they are symptomatic and need more intensive services.

Our analysis estimates that hospital charges for HIV/AIDS inpatient care approached $2.3 million over four years. Previous studies of Medicaid expenditures in North Carolina have found that inpatient charges represent 76% of total health care expenditures.⁴ By extrapolation from that figure, we estimate that the total health care expenditure for HIV/AIDS in Guilford County between July 1, 1987, and June 30, 1991, was $3 million. This does not include social service costs, volunteer contributions, indirect costs such as curtailed employment, or the human costs of pain and premature death. Clearly, this disease is too expensive to be ignored. Guilford County's willingness to assess and plan for the educational, health, and social service needs of HIV and AIDS is a step in the right direction. □

Screening for Human Immunodeficiency Virus in Physicians

Who Should We Test and What Will It Cost?

Amy A. Levine, MD, and Robert S. Sandler, MD, MPH

The public fears contracting human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) from infected health care workers—fears that were crystallized by the dramatic congressional testimony of the late Kimberly Bergalis, a 23-year-old Florida woman who was apparently infected by her dentist.¹ In July 1991, the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) issued recommendations aimed at preventing the transmission of HIV from health workers to patients.² Originally, the CDC planned to list exposure-prone invasive procedures that should not be performed by infected health care workers. This turned out to be no simple effort and had to be abandoned because of strong opposition from various professional organizations.³ Considerable controversy persists about what procedures are exposure-prone and who should perform them.

Screening for HIV is complicated by the problem of false-positive tests. When the prevalence of a disease in a population is low, most "positive" test results are false positives, and the positive predictive value of the test (the fraction of cases in which a result is positive because disease is truly present) is low. Further testing can separate true from false positives, but this requires additional time and money.

Because of the problems surrounding direct testing, we used a consensus panel to estimate which specialties of physician practice in North Carolina would include exposure-prone procedures. We then used estimates of HIV prevalence to calculate the number of false-positive results to be expected were screening tests to be used. We discuss the implications of our results, including the costs of uncovering previously undiagnosed cases of HIV infection among physicians.

Materials and Methods

We used data from the Manpower component of the North Carolina Cooperative Health Information System to determine the number and specialty distribution of physicians licensed by the Board of Medical Examiners to practice in North Carolina between January 1, 1990, and October 31, 1991. There were 10,643 physicians listed (excluding trainees); 10 were excluded because they did not indicate a specialty on their license application. The remaining 10,633, representing 80 specialties, were used for analysis. Details of the data collection methods are published elsewhere.⁴

We constructed a survey form that listed physician specialties based on the application for registration of the Board of Medical Examiners. We then recruited 10 panelists of whom nine were licensed physicians practicing one of the specialties included on the survey (one emergency physician, two family physicians, four internists, two pediatricians) and one was a dentist with specific expertise on HIV infection and transmission. The panelists were knowledgeable about procedures performed by the various specialty physicians included in the survey.

Panelists were asked to rate the likelihood that a physician in a given specialty would perform HIV exposure-prone procedures. The raters placed each of the 80 listed specialties into one of three categories according to the likelihood (high, intermediate, or low) that practitioners of the specialty would perform exposure-prone procedures. All 10 participants completed and returned all survey forms.

We used the Delphi method⁵ of feeding back information on the responses of the group in order to reach consensus. When there was no consensus (that is, when the category receiving the highest number of responses did not receive at least two more responses than the next highest category), we asked participants to resolve their uncertainty at a group meeting. Nine of the 10 participants attended this meeting.

Dr. Levine is with the Department of Nutrition, UNC School of Public Health, and the Department of Pediatrics, Department of Medicine, and Dr. Sandler is with the Department of Medicine, UNC School of Medicine, Chapel Hill 27599.

The Manpower data allowed us to estimate the number of North Carolina physicians practicing at each of the three levels of likelihood of involvement in exposure-prone procedures. We then modeled the hypothetical outcome of HIV screening using an Enzyme-Linked Immunosorbent Assay (ELISA) as the screening test. The decision to use ELISA (which has a reported sensitivity of 99% and specificity of 99.8%) was based on current screening practices as well as cost and feasibility considerations.⁶ We assumed that true HIV seropositivity would be confirmed by repeating initially positive ELISA tests followed by a Western Blot test on those doubly positive by ELISA, as is usual clinical practice.⁶ We then estimated the costs of screening and the cost for each true positive subject identified. Based on current charges at an academic medical center, the ELISA test (Abbott Laboratories) was assigned a cost of $45, and the Western Blot assay (Organon Technika), $75.

Results

In general, there was good agreement among the panelists about the likelihood that a physician in a given specialty would perform HIV exposure-prone procedures. Of the 80 specialties listed, there was clear agreement on the survey for 71 (89%). Nine specialties required the group meeting to decide placement.

Table 1 shows the specialties rated highly likely to involve HIV exposure-prone procedures and the numbers of North Carolina physicians practicing these specialties. Overall, there were 2,791 physicians in this group. Of interest, none of the specialties in this group required the consensus meeting to determine placement.

Table 2 shows specialties rated as having intermediate likelihood of engaging in HIV exposure-prone procedures. There were 5,482 North Carolina physicians in this group. It required group discussion to assign family practice, general practice, ophthalmology, radiology, neonatal-perinatal medicine, and pediatric nephrology to intermediate rather than low likelihood, and anesthesiology and pulmonary medicine to intermediate rather than high likelihood. Of the 21 specialties in the intermediate category, eight (38%) required the consensus discussion to determine placement.

Table 3, next page, shows specialties rated as having low likelihood of performing HIV exposure-prone procedures. This category included 2,360 physicians. Forensic pathology was the only one of 37 specialties (2.7%) in this group that required group decision-making to determine placement.

Positive predictive value (PPV) and its relationship to the results of a single positive serum ELISA is shown in Table 4, page 139. PPV provides the fraction of persons with a positive test result that are truly infected with HIV. PPV is highly correlated with prevalence of disease, so when a disease (HIV infection in this case) is rare in a population, positive test results are likely to be incorrect (that is, to be false positives); Table 4 demonstrates how PPV increases as the disease becomes more prevalent. At a prevalence of 1 in 10,000 the PPV is .047; that is, 47 out of 1,000 individuals with positive first ELISA tests will actually have HIV infection and the remaining 95.3% of individuals will have false-positive test results! The percentages of false-positive test results at various prevalences of HIV infection are shown in Table 4.

The last column of Table 4 estimates the cost of sorting out true from false positives at different levels of HIV prevalence. We followed common clinical practice: A positive ELISA screening test would be repeated and, if the second test was also positive, a Western Blot performed. Only specimens positive on all three tests would be considered truly positive for HIV infection.

If we were to use the ELISA, which has a sensitivity of 99% to screen a population of 10,000 individuals (approximately the number of physicians practicing in North Carolina) in whom the prevalence of HIV might be 1 in 2,000 (a reasonable estimate for physicians based on other populations where HIV seroprevalence is known^{6,7}), we would have a 99% chance of correctly identifying the five HIV infected individuals in the group. Since the specificity of the ELISA is 99.8%, 9,975 of the remaining 9,995 uninfected individuals would receive a negative test result. But this leaves 20 (9,995 minus 9,975) who are uninfected but falsely labeled as "positive" by the test. These 20 false positives and the five true positives would then undergo a repeat ELISA. The five true positives would likely be identified again, but all 20 of the false positives would likely test negative on the second round. The five individuals with the persistently positive ELISA results would then undergo a Western Blot test.

What would it cost to test 10,000 physicians? The cost of the initial ELISA would be $450,000 (10,000 tests at $45 each). The 25 repeat ELISA tests would cost $1,125, and the five Western Blot tests would cost $375. The total cost of screening the 10,000 would be $450,000 + $1,125 + $375 = $451,500. This means that, when HIV prevalence is 1 in 2,000, it would cost $451,500 to identify the five true positives by screening the 10,000. As disease prevalence goes up, the cost of identifying true positives goes down as shown in Table 4.

A case could be made for saving money by screening only those physicians who are highly likely to perform exposure-prone procedures. After all, these are the ones that the CDC says should know their HIV status. At a prevalence of 1 in 2,000, we estimate that one North Carolina physician would test positive; we would spend $125,985 to uncover that one case.

Discussion

The specter of physicians infecting patients with HIV greatly concerns the medical community and the public. Out of this concern arose the CDC recommendation that health professionals who perform HIV exposure-prone procedures know their infection status. For various reasons, it has not been possible to define precisely which procedures produce such exposure. We therefore focused on defining the specialties that are likely to involve exposure-prone procedures. We hoped thereby to identify a group of physicians in whom screening for HIV infection would make public health and economic sense.

We used a panel of 10 health care practitioners to identify those specialties, and our procedures generated a surprising amount of agreement. Out of the 80 specialties presented to the panel, clear initial agreement that the specialty used risky procedures emerged for 71 (89%). Indeed, those specialties judged most likely to perform exposure-prone procedures were the easiest to identify, with a unanimous verdict on the first cycle of voting.

In looking at the ranking of the various specialties, some clear trends emerge. Three types of specialty (Table 1) were rated as highly likely to employ HIV exposure-prone procedures: 1) the surgical specialties, including obstetrics and gynecology; 2) critical care and emergency medicine (because they involve invasive procedures, intensity and unpredictability of service, long hours, and a limited ability to preselect patients); and 3) nephrology (because hemodialysis involves frequent exposure to blood). In general, these specialties are associated with bloody, invasive procedures, episodic intensity of service, and low ability to preselect their patient population.

Specialties rated as having an intermediate likelihood of involving HIV exposure-prone procedures include the primary care specialties—family practice, general practice, internal medicine, and pediatrics—because all are associated with a high level of patient contact, some exposure to blood, and some invasive procedures (although fewer than in the high likelihood group). Most of the subspecialties of internal medicine and pediatrics were classified in the intermediate likelihood group, as were certain “clean” surgical specialties (ophthalmology, otology, and otorhinolaryngology), radiology, therapeutic radiology, and anesthesiology. These disciplines involve some, but not prolonged or frequent, blood exposure or invasive procedures; their procedures are usually performed in a controlled environment and they tend to be able to select their patients. Finally, blood banking was included in this category because, although the panel thought it involved significant blood exposure, this is always under very controlled circumstances. Overall, specialties in the intermediate likelihood category tend to be “hands-on” disciplines, somewhat oriented toward procedures that are less prolonged, frequent, or bloody than the high likelihood specialties. Physicians in this category are more likely to perform procedures in a controlled environment and are more likely to be able to select their patients.

The specialties rated as having a low likelihood of using HIV exposure-prone procedures exhibit a wide range of characteristics. Included in this group are the traditionally “hands-off” specialties (epidemiology, nutrition, pharmacology, maternal and fetal medicine, preventive medicine, and public health), the counseling specialties (addiction/chemical dependency treatment, psychiatry, and psychoanalysis), specialties with few and minimally bloody procedures (allergy, dermatology, neurology, endocrinology, and rheumatology), specialties with rare invasive procedures (adolescent medicine, aerospace medicine, occupational medicine, physical medicine/rehabilitation, and sports medicine), the subspecialties of pathology, most of the subspecialties of radiology, and nuclear medicine. Geriatrics is included because there is a low prevalence of HIV in the elderly. In general, the specialties with low likelihood involve minimal (or no) invasive procedures or highly selected patient populations or both.

One specialty that seems out of place on the low likelihood list is cardiovascular disease which would seem to belong in the intermediate likelihood category along with other subspecialties of internal medicine. It is probably misclassified because, although it is listed as “cardiovascular disease” in the Health Manpower data, most physicians refer to the specialty as “cardiology.” A poll of several of the study participants found that, had the specialty been listed instead as cardiology, it would have been ranked in the intermediate group.

North Carolina is not a state with a high endemic rate of HIV infection, and the risk of acquiring HIV infection from a patient (for example, through a contaminated needle stick) is small.⁸ Given the rates of seropositivity in comparison populations,^{6,7} an estimate of about 1 HIV-infected physician in 2,000 seems reasonable. As illustrated in the last column of Table 4, the cost expended to detect each true case at this low prevalence is $90,300 (if HIV prevalence were 1 in 1,000 the cost of identifying each case would be $45,210). Keep in mind that HIV screening is not effective as a one-time only test. To ensure that new infections will not be missed, the population must be rescreened at regular intervals. Repeated screening further drives up the cost of detecting each new case.

Our study contains several limitations. The consensus panel was small and did not include representatives from all specialties. It is possible that, as happened with cardiovascular disease, the content or practice patterns of some specialties may not have been correctly understood by the panelists. Likewise, the rating of specialties did not allow for variations in practice patterns within a specialty. It is possible that a different or larger group might have arrived at different likelihood rankings, although the high degree of consensus reached by our group of panelists is reassuring.

In order to reduce the risk of HIV transmission from physician to patient, the CDC recommends that physicians who engage in procedures producing exposure to HIV should voluntarily be tested for the virus. We identified specialties of physician practice, rather than procedures, at highest risk of acquiring and transmitting HIV. There was a high degree of consensus in the rankings, but estimates of the current prevalence of HIV among North Carolina physicians are so low that it would be extremely costly to identify new cases by screening even those in the highest risk specialties. If estimates of HIV prevalence are revised upward, screening of physicians in the highlikelihood groups may become useful and cost-effective. □

Screening for Melanoma

"Here's Looking at You, Kid"

Jeffrey G. Wong, MD, and John R. Feussner, MD

"Carol Jones, the 22-year-old daughter of Mr. Jones, comes to the office for periodic examination. She is a senior in college, does not smoke cigarettes, has no significant medical history, but has a severe sunburn from her recent spring break trip to the beach. She says that she usually 'gets a little burned each year,' but that this is the worst she has ever had despite using over-the-counter sunburn cream, and she is still very uncomfortable. On physical exam, she has red hair and even redder skin with an underlying fair complexion. On examination you find no worrisome skin lesions."

What should you tell Ms. Jones about the dangers of sun exposure? How should you plan to follow her? How significant is her risk for developing skin cancer in general, and melanoma in particular? Does she need to regularly use sunscreens? Using the six guidelines provided in our first article (NC Med J 1993;54:218-21), we will formulate a recommendation for her, reviewing each guideline individually in order to arrive at a reasonable therapeutic plan.

Target Disease Considerations

1. Is the disease common or serious enough to warrant screening?

Possibly yes. There are more than 500,000 new cases of skin cancer each year and incidence rates in the U.S. are increasing faster than for any other type of cancer.¹ Fortunately, most skin cancers are basal cell epitheliomas or squamous cell carcinomas which for the most part are treated easily and rarely metastasize. Melanoma, though relatively uncommon in the general population, is a serious health problem; the mortality rate of melanoma is increasing faster than that of any other cancer except lung cancer.² More often than not, melanoma affects young patients who lose many years of potential life if they should die from this disease.³ Skin cancer screening may discover any of the different types of skin cancer, but in this paper we will confine our discussion to the most serious of these, melanoma.

2. Is there a pre-symptomatic phase in the natural history of the disease during which time a test can detect it?

Yes. Melanoma is rarely symptomatic except in extremely advanced stages. Most often the primary lesion is visible on the skin and, once removed by skin biopsy, the diagnosis is clear. The earliest stage in the natural history of melanoma is a phase of non-invasive radial growth which lasts for months to years.⁴ During this radial growth phase we have the opportunity for detection and treatment before invasion occurs.

3. Are there effective treatments for the disease available to use after early detection?

Probably yes. Removal of early-stage, thin melanoma lesions leads to excellent survival rates. The thicker the lesion when removed, the poorer the prognosis. There is a wide discrepancy in survival even when the melanoma is confined to the skin (Stage I disease); it is worse when there is lymph node involvement (Stage II) or distant metastases (Stage III). Patients whose Stage I melanoma is detected when its thickness is <0.76 mm have a five-year survival rate of 99% whereas patients whose Stage I melanoma has a thickness of >4.0 mm when detected have only a 44% survival rate.⁵ Clark levels and Breslow thickness scales have been used to describe the tumor's potential to invade and metastasize⁶ because once the disease becomes metastatic, the prognosis is dismal (five-year survival rate <10%).⁵

Treatment of early stage disease consists of wide-margin surgical excision of the lesion. No therapy has been proven effective for metastatic disease⁷ although chemotherapy with bone marrow transplantation has been recently investigated at Duke University and at other centers. Nevertheless, at the present time detection at a very early stage is critical if we are to make any impact on the mortality of melanoma.

Screening Test Considerations

1. Are there screening tests with acceptable sensitivity and specificity available to detect the target disease?

Who knows? There are no serological tests for melanoma. Much like oral cancer (see NC Med J 1994;55:65-7), the primary screening test is visual examination and palpation (Table 1). The test is non-invasive, painless and requires "only an undressed patient and a pair of trained eyes."⁸ No randomized controlled trials have been performed, but there are many published studies investigating the effectiveness of the skin examination for detecting melanoma. Koh's review⁹ provides a summary of those results but we want to mention two projects individually.

The largest population-wide study of melanoma screening is the Queensland Melanoma Project, begun in 1963. Australia, with an extraordinarily high rate of melanoma (16.5 cases/100,000 per year) has mounted a huge campaign of screening and educating the public about melanoma. The authors report increased detection of early stage melanomas through screening efforts and a fall in the proportion of later stage melanomas. They have also observed a continued rise in the incidence of new cases of melanoma and no improvement of the mortality rate.¹⁰

In Scotland, it was found that 33% percent of patients had melanoma lesions >3.5mm in thickness at diagnosis, with resulting five-year survival rates of about 38%. Consequently, a public education program in Western Scotland was designed to teach patients about the features of early melanoma and to encourage them to seek treatment for any suspicious le-sions. The rest of Scotland did not receive the education program and served as a "control." The authors of this study report an increased proportion of thin melanomas found, and a decline in melanoma mortality (although only among women!) in West Scotland.¹¹

From his summary of reported studies,⁹ Koh estimates the sensitivity of skin examination by physicians to be about 75%. The positive predictive value has ranged widely but those programs with careful patient follow-up of positive results have shown positive predictive values of 27%-30%. Specificity has been estimated at 95%-98% although few "negative" lesions are actually biopsied.

Of course, all values cited for sensitivity and specificity depend on the skills of the examiner, and the values for predictive value depend on the population screened. In most reported studies, screening skin examinations have been performed by dermatologists, and the availability of enough trained examiners becomes a critical issue when making recommendations for added screening.

Whether the above-reported estimates of screening accuracy can be maintained by non-dermatologist clinicians is an important, but as yet not fully answered, question. Cassileth and associates¹² showed photographs of skin lesions to dermatologists and to non-dermatologist physicians. The dermatologists properly identified melanoma 69% of the time, but the non-dermatologists were correct only 12% of the time. This difference has led some to conclude that only dermatologists can effectively screen for melanoma.¹³

Another important issue in skin cancer screening involves educating patients about the visual characteristics of melanoma. Half of all melanomas are first brought to the physician's attention by the patient.¹⁴ Educating patients to perform periodic self-examination might increase this proportion, but no data exist to support this argument and patient education may even be counter-productive for early detection. In one report, patients who did discover suspicious lesions delayed seeing a physician until the lesion had become symptomatic!¹⁵

The American Academy of Dermatology (ADD) has provided personalized education and screening programs since 1985.¹⁴ During these sessions, free skin examinations are performed by volunteer dermatologists on groups of patients who desire screening. In addition to skin examination, patients are taught the "ABCDs" of melanoma: Asymmetry of lesions; Border irregularity; Color variability (brown, bluish red, or black); and Diameter >6mm. Participating patients are encouraged to perform self examination at home and to avoid excessive sun exposure by using sunscreens.

 - ✓ Light-colored eyes (usually blue)
 - ✓ Light hair color (usually blonde or red)

 - ✓ A tendency to freckle after sun exposure
 - ✓ Inability to tan leading to predisposition to sunburn
2. Inherited syndromes:
 - Hereditary Melanoma syndromes
 - Dysplastic Nevus Syndrome
 - Multiple Common Melanocytic Nevi
 - Xeroderma Pigmentosa

these lesions were biopsied. Without referring to the legend, can you determine which of these were malignant melanoma and which were other skin cancers? Participation in this exercise gives one an appreciation for some of the difficulties encountered by clinicians in deciding which lesions to biopsy.

2. Can an appropriate population of high-risk patients be identified to undergo screening?

Probably yes. Several populations have an increased risk for developing melanoma (Table 2). Members of families having hereditary melanoma is one such population; in some subgroups studied, the chances of family members developing melanoma approach 100%.¹¹ Patients with dysplastic nevus syndrome, patients with numerous common acquired melanocytic nevi, and patients with the rare disorder, xeroderma pigmentosa, are also at increased risk.

Much has been made about the interaction of sun exposure and skin phenotype with risk for melanoma. There is little doubt that ultraviolet (UV) radiation from sunlight and tanning beds can cause basal cell and squamous cell cancers, but melanoma lesions may or may not develop in sun-exposed areas of the skin. Nonetheless, traditional epidemiological reports describe the "Irish lass" phenotype as an important risk factor in cutaneous melanoma.¹¹ This phenotype describes patients with light eye color (usually blue), light hair color (blonde or red), fair complexion, a tendency to freckle, and an inability to tan or predisposition to sunburn.

Do sunscreens prevent melanoma? These products contain agents such as paraaminobenzoic acid (PABA) that absorb UV light or particulate matter such as zinc oxide and magnesium that reflect and scatter UV light. Sunscreens clearly reduce sun-induced erythema, sunburn and chronic actinic skin injury, but there is as yet no definitive evidence that their use decreases the incidence or mortality of melanoma.¹⁶

3. Do the benefits of screening justify the costs of the screening strategy?

Who knows? Without accurate data on sensitivity, specificity, and predictive value, cost-benefit analysis is difficult. The test itself (careful inspection by a trained observer) and even subsequent skin biopsy are not especially painful, but certain "chagrin" factors such as needless worry over a falsely "positive" skin lesion or an inappropriate sense of security due to an overlooked or misdiagnosed (false "negative") lesion must be important factors.

Because so few dermatologists are available for screening, there is a great need for proper training of primary care physicians before any large scale screening programs can take place. Furthermore, any large scale screening strategy would encumber huge costs, due mostly to the increased time spent fully examining the skin.¹⁴

Recommendations

The National Cancer Institute¹⁷ and the American Cancer Society¹⁸ recommend including a complete skin examination as part of periodic health evaluations. The American Academy of Dermatology recommends annual skin examination by a physician and monthly self-examinations. Despite lacking definitive evidence of effectiveness, they also recommend limiting sun exposure and the regular use of sunscreen and protective clothing while in the sun. The Canadian Task Force¹⁹ and the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force²⁰ do not recommend mass screening except for patients at particularly high risk. The frequency with which this high risk screening should take place is not addressed. They do state, however, that physicians should be vigilant about identifying suspicious lesions in normal-risk patients during periodic examinations.

Ms. Jones is at fairly high risk for melanoma due to her "Irish lass" phenotype and her repeated sun exposure. We would perform a complete skin examination at each of her periodic health visits, instruct her on the characteristics of suspicious lesions, and advise her to minimize her sun exposure by using protective clothing and sunscreens regularly. □

October Cover Kudos

To the Editor:

The painting of the Catsburg General Store on the cover of the October 1993 Journal evoked fond memories for me. I grew up in Durham and passed by that store many times during trips to the country. I would appreciate some information on artist Bob Blake, as I would be most interested in obtaining one of his images of this fine old landmark.

From the Editor:

Durham artist Bob Blake was a medical illustrator at Duke University Medical Center for 41 years before retiring a decade ago. He specializes in landscapes, "from the coast to the mountains," and his works are featured at shows and galleries statewide.

"Open Late," his rendering of the Catsburg store, is part of a collection of historical Durham scenes that are not for sale. You can order an 8-by-10 or 11-by-14-inch color photograph of the painting from Mr. Blake for a nominal fee. For details or information about other works by Mr. Blake, write him at The Forest at Duke, 2701 Pickett Road, Durham, NC 27705.

Guidelines for Letters

Letters should not exceed 500 words; we will accept longer letters and consider them for publication elsewhere in the Journal. Letters are subject to editing and abridgment. Letters must be typed, signed, and include the author's name, address, and phone number.

Letters addressing specific points in previously published articles may be sent to the original authors for response. Send letters to: North Carolina Medical Journal, Box 3910, DUMC, Durham, NC 27710; or fax them to 919/286-9219.

Adult Patients With Congenital Heart Disease

Jennifer Li, MD, J. Kevin Harrison, MD, Martin P. O'Laughlin, MD, Thomas M. Bashore, MD, and Arthur Garson, Jr., MD, MPH

Some 25,000 infants born each year in the U.S. have congenital heart disease. In the past, many would have succumbed as children, but as a result of diagnostic, medical, and surgical advances, at least 85% now survive into adulthood.^{1,2} The growing number of adults with congenital heart disease make up a complex group of patients—most with repaired, but some with palliated or uncorrected heart disease. Even those who have had their heart problems “corrected” continue to require long-term care.

About half the population of adult patients with congenital heart disease have had cardiac surgery; the remainder represent natural survival to adulthood. Table 1 demonstrates the heart defects we have seen most frequently at Duke University Medical Center where we recently celebrated the first birthday of the Adult Congenital Heart Service—a program involving both adult and pediatric cardiology and cardiac surgery. There are few established centers for the care of adults with congenital heart disease in Canada, England, and the U.S., although more are being established. In this paper we describe some of the important lessons we have learned during our first year of operation.

The authors are with the Division of Cardiology, and the Departments of Pediatrics and Medicine, Duke University Medical Center, Box 31172, Durham 27710.

A Typical Case

This case of a patient who presented in adulthood with congenital heart disease illustrates the type of patients and problems we see in our newly developed clinic:

A 28-year-old woman had carried a diagnosis since childhood of “heart murmur and palpitations.” On the second day following the birth of her first child, she developed dysarthria and right hemiparesis. Computed tomographic (CT) scan of the brain showed a left cortical infarct. Examination of the heart showed a right ventricular lift, a widely split S2, and a systolic murmur at the left upper sternal border. Chest roentgenogram showed cardiomegaly with an enlarged main pulmonary segment, and there were changes of right axis deviation and right ventricular hypertrophy on electrocardiogram. Two-dimensional echocardiogram revealed a large ostium secundum atrial septal defect with dilation of the right ventricle and right atrium. A Holter monitor showed episodes of intermittent atrial flutter. At cardiac catheterization, there was normal pulmonary resistance with a large left-to-right atrial level shunt.

During the next three months, the patient made a nearly complete neurological recovery and underwent repair of the atrial septal defect. Atrial arrhythmias did not occur post-operatively and the patient has remained well over the next two years.

Medical Problems Encountered on the Adult Congenital Heart Service

As seen in the above case, arrhythmias are common in certain congenital cardiac malformations. We advocate antiarrhythmic therapy in patients whose arrhythmias produce symptoms (such as syncope or presyncope) and those that may lead to sudden death. Treatment may involve drug therapy or ablation (by surgery or via catheter) of accessory atrioventricular pathways or foci of atrial or ventricular tachycardia. Pacemaker implantation and implantable defibrillators may be required in certain high-risk patients.

Patients who have uncorrected or palliated heart disease may have cyanosis, pulmonary hypertension, or heart failure. Cyanotic patients develop hematologic problems such as erythrocytosis or excessive bleeding tendencies; they may have bone and joint abnormalities, and the potential for cerebrovascular accidents. Patients with large shunts from the left to right side of the heart often develop pulmonary hypertension; they may need prolonged home oxygen therapy, or single lung or heart/lung transplantation. Many patients with congenital heart disease, especially those with complex defects, develop myocardial failure. Treatment with diuretics, digoxin, and after-load reduction can be helpful, but we increasingly consider heart transplantation in patients with congenital heart disease and end-stage heart failure.

Two of the major points of evaluation in adults with congenital heart disease relate to counseling about prophylaxis of endocarditis and the appropriate limitations of exercise. Most congenital heart lesions produce potential sites for bacterial endocarditis. It is essential that patients adhere to recommendations regarding antimicrobial prophylaxis in high-risk situations such as dental, gastrointestinal, or genitourinary procedures. Many lesions of the cardiovascular system also place patients at higher risk of symptoms or sudden death during exercise (depending on the type, intensity, and duration of exercise and the type and severity of the congenital heart defect). Individualized, expert advice is necessary in each case.

Pregnancy is a matter of concern as demonstrated by the problems in our patient. With careful management many women with congenital heart disease can successfully tolerate and complete pregnancy and give birth to healthy infants. Close collaboration between cardiologist and obstetrician is extremely important. Because of the complexity of inheritance patterns and the risks of recurrent congenital lesions, parents with congenital heart disease should receive genetic counseling before they undertake pregnancy.³

Interventional Treatment

Cardiac surgery. Adults with congenital heart disease may require either initial or additional cardiac surgery. Patients who have previously undergone surgery may have prosthetic conduits or valves that have limited "life-spans" and will need replacement. We see an increasing number of patients who require such re-operation. Patients with residual lesions that are amenable to surgical repair must undergo re-operation before they develop irreversible ventricular dysfunction.

Delineation of the cardiovascular anatomy may be carried out by echocardiography (using transthoracic or transesophageal imaging), but often preoperative cardiac catheterization is needed. Patients with severe ventricular dysfunction but acceptably low pulmonary vascular resistance are candidates for heart transplantation. Those with elevated pulmonary vascular resistance (primary or secondary to Eisenmenger's complex) can be considered for heart-lung transplantation or transplantation of a single lung and repair of the cardiac defect.³

Interventional cardiac catheterization. Therapeutic intervention by cardiac catheterization is now the preferred treatment (or an important adjunct to the surgical treatment) of selected patients with congenital heart disease.⁴ Lesions amenable to repair by dilation using a catheter-borne balloon include valvular pulmonic stenosis, recurrent coarctation of the aorta, and peripheral pulmonary artery stenosis. Devices delivered by catheter to close shunts in patients with patent ductus arteriosus, secundum atrial septal defects, and muscular ventricular septal defects are a promising, exciting area of investigation.⁵ In addition, congenital pulmonary arteriovenous fistulae and shunts and collateral vessels diverting systemic flow to the pulmonary artery can be occluded using percutaneously delivered devices such as detachable balloons, foam, or coils.

Psychosocial Problems of Patients

A number of psychosocial problems relate to the chronic illnesses experienced by adults with congenital heart disease. Few of them are physically disabled, but obtaining work is a significant problem since many either do not look for work, have not had sufficient training to find appropriate jobs, or face job discrimination. The inability to get adequate health insurance is another major problem.³

Summary

Adult patients with congenital heart disease present complex problems that require individualized management. Unfortunately, few physicians who care for adults with congenital heart disease have received adequate specific training to deal with their problems.⁶ Pediatric cardiologists who are familiar with congenital heart disease often refer patients to adult cardiologists after adolescence. And adult cardiologists have not traditionally had much training or experience in dealing with congenital heart disease. The cardiac needs of these patients are often best managed through the collaborative efforts of adult and pediatric cardiologists, cardiac surgeons, specialized nurse clinicians, and social workers.¹ Of course, it is crucial to their optimal care that there be involvement of a primary care physician who can help with their many medical, surgical, and psychosocial problems. □

YOHIMBINE HCl

Description: Yohimbine is a 3a-15a-20B-17a-hydroxy Yohimbine-16a-carboxylic acid methyl ester. The alkaloid is found in Rubiaceae and related trees. Also in Rauwolfia Serpentina (L) Benth. Yohimbine is an indolalkylamine alkaloid with chemical similarity to reserpine. It is a crystalline powder, odorless. Each compressed tablet contains (1/12 gr.) 5.4 mg of Yohimbine Hydrochloride.

Action: Yohimbine blocks presynaptic alpha-2 adrenergic receptors. Its action on peripheral blood vessels resembles that of reserpine, though it is weaker and of short duration. Yohimbine's peripheral autonomic nervous system effect is to increase parasympathetic (cholinergic) and decrease sympathetic (adrenergic) activity. It is to be noted that in male sexual performance, erection is linked to cholinergic activity and to alpha-2 adrenergic blockade which may theoretically result in increased penile inflow, decreased penile outflow or both.

Yohimbine exerts a stimulating action on the mood and may increase anxiety. Such actions have not been adequately studied or related to dosage although they appear to require high doses of the drug. Yohimbine has a mild anti-diuretic action, probably via stimulation of hypothalamic centers and release of posterior pituitary hormone.

Reportedly, Yohimbine exerts no significant influence on cardiac stimulation and other effects mediated by 8-adrenergic receptors, its effect on blood pressure, if any, would be to lower it; however no adequate studies are at hand to quantitate this effect in terms of Yohimbine dosage.

Indications: Yocon[®] is indicated as a sympatholytic and mydriatic. It may have activity as an aphrodisiac.

Contraindications: Renal diseases, and patient's sensitive to the drug. In view of the limited and inadequate information at hand, no precise tabulation can be offered of additional contraindications.

Warning: Generally, this drug is not proposed for use in females and certainly must not be used during pregnancy. Neither is this drug proposed for use in pediatric, geriatric or cardio-renal patients with gastric or duodenal ulcer history. Nor should it be used in conjunction with mood-modifying drugs such as antidepressants, or in psychiatric patients in general.

Adverse Reactions: Yohimbine readily penetrates the (CNS) and produces a complex pattern of responses in lower doses than required to produce peripheral a-adrenergic blockade. These include, anti-diuresis, a general picture of central excitation including elevation of blood pressure and heart rate, increased motor activity, irritability and tremor. Sweating, nausea and vomiting are common after parenteral administration of the drug.^{1,2} Also dizziness, headache, skin flushing reported when used orally.^{1,3}

Dosage and Administration: Experimental dosage reported in treatment of erectile impotence.^{1,3,4} 1 tablet (5.4 mg) 3 times a day, to adult males taken orally. Occasional side effects reported with this dosage are nausea, dizziness or nervousness. In the event of side effects dosage to be reduced to 1/2 tablet 3 times a day, followed by gradual increases to 1 tablet 3 times a day. Reported therapy not more than 10 weeks.³

How Supplied: Oral tablets of Yocon[®] 1/12 gr. 5.4 mg in bottles of 100's NDC 53159-001-01 and 1000's NDC 53159-001-10.

Aphorisms of the Month

Daniel J. Sexton, M.D., Editor

Means, Goals, and Death

Perfection of means and confusion of goals seem, in my opinion, to characterize our age.

—Albert Einstein

—George Washington, 1799, provided by Dr. Mark Thel

Everything has been written which could by possibility persuade us that death is not an evil.... Nevertheless, I doubt whether any man of good sense ever believed it.

—Duc François de La Rochefoucauld

Death is the ugly fact which nature has to hide, and she hides it well.

—Ibid., Ch. III

Old men go to death, and death comes to young men
Young men may die, old men must.
Death devours lambs as well as sheep.

—Proverbs

You have two chances—one of getting the germ and one of not. And if you get the germ you have two chances—one of getting the disease and one of not. And if you get the disease you have two chances—one of dying and one of not. And if you die—well, you still have two chances!

Paper, who needs it!

Pen-Based Medical Network™ offers very significant benefits for doctors and staff. Review medications, lab results, progress notes and input orders, charges, diagnoses, examination results without a keyboard.

These FAST changing times force physicians to see more patients for less compensation while struggling to maintain high patient care standards. The ONLY answer is to practice with higher efficiency. However, statistics demonstrate that outdated office procedures are the norm resulting in the CERTAINTY of lost time, lower standards of patient care and reduced revenue. Just a few statistics in areas where the Pen-Based Network can help:

- 38% of a doctor's time is spent writing charts.
- 50% of a nurse's time is spent writing charts.
- In 30% of patient visits, the medical record is inaccessible.
- 11% of laboratory tests have to be reordered because the results are not in the chart.

What is the Pen-Based Medical Network?

It uses a hand-held, light-weight, mobile, electronic chart. Achieve cost control, improve communication, meet user and patient expectations. Charts are available to multiple users simultaneously. Give nurses more time for patient care. Enhance quality of care. Develop more effective care plans. Improve cash flow.

High Efficiency at Reasonable Cost!

Randy Long, M.D., Lexington, NC

Earning its way from the first day

“CompuSystems’ Medical Practice Management System has been an integral part of my practice since I opened five years ago. Actually, we had the equipment in place and had been through training two weeks before opening. That investment paid off right away: In our first day, we used the Appointment Scheduler module to make 76 appointments.”

Flexible software to suit your needs

“One of the Medical System features we’ve found most beneficial is its flexibility. There’s almost always more than one way to complete a given task, so we can select the options that suit our preferences and operational needs. And CompuSystems’ staff is always available

Outstanding service to stay productive

“The service and maintenance we get from CompuSystems couldn’t be better. They stay on top of the myriad changes implemented by Medicare and other third-party carriers, so our software is always up to date. If we have a question or problem, we can get the help we need. Finally, consistency is provided at all levels: The telephone support staff keeps excellent records, so we don’t start over each time we call, and the on-site hardware service is expert.

“After five years, I have only praise for CompuSystems, and I can’t imagine running my practice without their help.”

- More physicians in North and South Carolina choose CompuSystems’ Medical Practice Management System than any other.
- Electronic filing to North Carolina Medicare, Medicaid, BC/BS, and the 90+ commercial carriers of NEIC, all with no per-claim charges.
- Features to maximize return, improve cash flow, and increase productivity.
- “One-call,” total system support.

DEWEES ISLAND, SC?

Located only a nine-minute ferry ride north of the Isle of Palms lies one of the South's last barrier islands available for development...Dewees Island, SC.

Dewees Island is an island of over 1,200 acres, yet environmental covenants limit the number of homes to only 150. And with over 30 percent of the available lots sold, an interesting statistic arises...almost 50 percent of our buyers are physicians.

Here's why:

"I can't imagine a more beautifully preserved island within a stone's throw of Charleston."

Dewees Island has the vision that other resorts will wish they had." Dr. Henri Keiffer-Asheville, NC

"We loved the seclusion and privacy."

Dr. Allen Mitchell - Signal Mountain, TN

"We like the philosophy of development, ecologically and environmentally and plan to retire there." Dr. Joseph (Bubber) McAlhany - Greenville, SC

Come explore this private, oceanfront retreat...prices start at $150,000, with 2-acre oceanfront lots from $315,000.

Letters to the Editor

On Pain: May 15, 2080

To the Editor:

Sometimes my daydreams are of past events, remembered and cherished. At other times they are of things and places and scenes that have not yet come to pass:

Four score and seven years ago, before we had conquered AIDS, cancer, and Alzheimer's disease, there was great turmoil among the people who walked the earth. Some thought AIDS was a punishment for sin; cancer a visitation from the gods; and Alzheimer's, a natural progression of birthdays sautéed in aluminum pots. Millions died every year from these three plagues. For the individual, suffering was limitless; for the family, it was almost beyond the breaking point; society was beside itself. So many were the theories and suggestions and governmental proposals of how to appease the gods that sensible thinking was clouded by these shots in the dark. People suffered; bodies became victims; orphans multiplied in untold numbers. Humankind was totally distraught.

There walked one among the masses who saw through different eyes and marched to a different drummer. He knew that he was looking at disease processes. He had no cure for the diseases, but he knew he could relieve some of the suffering some of the time. As he studied the masses, he found not one soul who wanted to go through the terminal phases of one of these diseases.

He especially observed his fellow physicians. He could not find one who would say, "When my brain has gone and my suffering continues, please see to it that I am allowed—no, forced—to continue to breathe until bedsores become the doctor's chief concern, until I have ruined my family's chances for a happy life, and until I have used up all the savings I had set aside for my children's education." Rather, they said, "There must be a better way to leave the world than by hanging from an IV tube and a respirator." They just didn't have the gall and guts to face the problem head-on.

We gather today, not to hallow, but to remember and honor one physician who, even before he went to medical school, had compassion for the sick and a desire to offer ease where there was disease, even when cure was impossible. He knew this yearning long before others in his class bogged down in the "Hypocritic" oath. Though he was scorned, scoffed at, even imprisoned for relieving the suffering of others, he continued to break trail in the medical darkness of his time.

Today, we rise to remember and salute Dr. Jack Kevorkian, a man whose vision and courage were respected by many, even in his own day, and by many more today in the year 2080. May peace abide with his soul.

Health Care Rationing: Not Such a Bad Idea

To the Editor:

Tens of millions of words have been written about health care reform. I have read all 1,364 pages of Clinton's formidable proposal, the legislation proposed by Rep. Tim Cooper (D-Tenn.), and dozens of articles and commentaries about health reform. Here is my sense of what needs to be done, and how to do it.

1) Cut waste: Daily, we order thousands of unnecessary but very expensive Magnetic Resonance Images, Computed Tomograms, and other high-tech tests. We get them because: a) Insurance companies and third-party payors readily reimburse for such procedures rather than for a thoughtful but time-consuming physical examination that would assess the need for such tests. b) Doctors fear that they will be sued for malpractice if the patient does not do well. c) Patients feel better if they get expensive tests. To this add the tremendous cost of paperwork and compulsive record-keeping. The Rand Corporation estimates the cost of such waste at $80 billion.

2) Encourage personal responsibility: Emphasize health education and prevention. Many forms of heart disease, cancer, certainly AIDS, and other killers can be prevented. The cost of caring for patients with these diseases alone is more than $100 billion; they can be prevented by proper diet, not smoking, exercise, and a monogamous relationship.

3) Reform the insurance market: Insurance companies have encouraged the myth that it doesn't cost anything to get sick. This myth has led to the building of palaces for and empires by the insurance companies. If patients would assume some direct responsibility for the costs of their illness and their behavior when sick, we could save another $80 billion.

4) Reform the tort system: Malpractice happens. When it does, patients, not trial lawyers, should be compensated. California and Florida have adopted a reasonable cap on payments and their systems work. Let the malpractice money go directly to the patient (victim). As things stand now, after the lawyers and the judicial system get through, only 23 cents of each malpractice dollar goes to the patient. And the cost is $40 billion.

5) Minimize the cost of violent crime: Last year, caring for victims of violent crimes cost more than $30 billion. Let's ban guns and de-glamorize ownership of guns and rifles among our teens. Better yet, let's be prepared to love and support our children. Education, family planning, and love are answers.

6) Stop wasting money at the margins of life: The cost of care for the extremely aged and infirm and for infants born weighing 500-700 grams adds another $150 billion. The society must debate and decide the ethical definition of "life." Biological definition is not enough. We might even want to take a look at rationing health care at these debatable extremes of life.

In spite of the administration's public hysteria, we do not have a health care crisis. We do have problems in our health care system, however, which may be solved by implementing these six steps.

Pearl of the Month: "Salvaging the Wedding Ring"

People hate to have their wedding rings cut off, even if their fingers are swollen. It's possible to remove the ring without cutting it—and befriend the patient—with this method:

1. Sit the patient on a low chair or footstool.
2. Raise the ring finger to your chest height. (This begins to drain blood to the patient's heart level.)
3. Starting at the tip of the ring finger, tightly wrap kite string or cotton twine around the finger, leaving no skin exposed. Wrap all the way to the ring.
4. Slip the twine under the ring. The finger is now squeezed dry, wrinkled and small.
5. Now the fun begins. Dance around the patient three times, chanting: "Woo-woo-woo-woo."
6. Start pulling the string that is under the ring toward the fingertip. When it unwinds one full revolution, the ring is the width of the string closest to the fingertip.
7. Pull five more revolutions. You are now five more string widths closer to the fingertip.
8. You must figure out the rest yourself, but if you do it right, you will have a very grateful patient!

—Bruce B. Blackmon, MD

Corrections: The article, "Conjoint Report: To the North Carolina Medical Society and the North Carolina Commission for Health Services," (NC Med J 1994;55:18-20) contained two errors. In the section "Infant Mortality and Maternal Health," the 1992 North Carolina infant mortality rate should be 9.9 per 1,000, not 9.2. Also, in 1992 there was a 5% decline in the number of adolescent pregnancies, not a 5% decline in the rate of adolescent pregnancies.

Urethral Cuff Erosion as a Result of Urinary Catheterization in Patients With an Artificial Urinary Sphincter

Joseph M. Khoury, MD, George D. Webster, MB, FRCS, and Luis M. Perez, MD

Loss of the ability to control urination is a matter of extreme distress to patients. In 1973, F. Brantley Scott introduced the American Medical Systems (AMS) 721 artificial urinary sphincter. This has evolved into the most reliable tool for managing sphincteric incontinence.¹ Continence rates of 90% are achieved with relatively few post-operative problems.^{2,3} The latest model, the AMS Sphincter 800, was introduced in 1980 and (unlike the earlier 791/792 series) contains an on/off button to allow deactivation of the device. This deactivation option offers several advantages including: 1) Immediate post-operative deactivation of the cuff minimizes urethral compression and necrosis resulting in fewer complications. 2) Nocturnal deactivation in high-risk patients, such as those having previous pelvic irradiation, can maintain vascularity and viability of urethral tissues and thereby avoid cuff erosion. 3) Deactivation during urethral catheterization or instrumentation obviates direct urethral trauma or tight compression of the urethra between the catheter and cuff that can cause cuff erosion.

The AMS Sphincter 800 is very helpful in surgical treatment of sphincteric incontinence, but some urologists rarely implant this device and so may be unfamiliar with its management. Furthermore, primary care physicians or non-urologic surgeons may, in the intensive care unit or operating room, need to pass a urinary catheter or manage one in a patient who has an artificial urinary sphincter. We have seen patients who developed recurrent incontinence due to cuff erosion after urinary catheterization during a hospital admission. We describe two exemplary cases, and outline our recommendations for management for patients with an implanted artificial urinary sphincter.

Case 1. A 60-year-old man with severe chronic obstructive pulmonary disease underwent radical perineal prostatectomy for adenocarcinoma of the prostate in 1980. He developed post-prostatectomy incontinence for which an AMS Sphincter 800 was implanted around the bulbar urethra in 1983.

In December 1990, respiratory failure prompted his admission to the intensive care unit at another hospital where he was maintained on a ventilator for 11 days. In the intensive care unit, the artificial sphincter was deactivated (see Discussion) and a Foley urethral catheter kept in place for three weeks.

One month after discharge, he came to our clinic complaining of right groin, scrotal, and perineal discomfort for four days. Physical examination revealed right scrotal, inguinal, and perineal tenderness and erythema. Urethroscopy confirmed an eroded sphincter cuff. The patient was admitted, given parenteral antibiotics, and the next day all components of the artificial sphincter removed at surgical exploration. The urethra was repaired and a Foley catheter left indwelling for six weeks. He now uses a condom catheter.

Case 2. A 67-year-old man underwent radical retropubic prostatectomy in 1988 for adenocarcinoma of the prostate. He developed post-prostatectomy incontinence and an AMS Sphincter 800 was implanted and a cuff placed around the bulbar urethra in October 1989.

In June 1990, the patient had an abdominal aortic aneurysm repaired at another hospital. A Foley catheter was inserted and left in place for five days with the cuff in the activated mode.

The patient came to the clinic one month later complaining of urinary incontinence and penile pain radiating to the right hemiscrotum. There was tenderness of the perineum but no inflammation. Urethroscopy showed unequivocal cuff erosion. He was admitted, parenteral antibiotics begun, and the urethral cuff was explored through the old perineal incision. The urine was sterile and since there were no intraoperative findings of infection, only the cuff was removed after the tubing was cross clamped, sectioned, and ligated with Prolene suture. The urethra was closed over a 16 French urethral catheter in two layers. The catheter was removed after four weeks, and the patient subsequently underwent implantation of a new cuff at an alternate urethral site.

Discussion

Since first being developed, the artificial urinary sphincter has undergone several biomechanical improvements. It is now used to correct sphincteric incontinence of various etiologies.² Artificial urinary sphincters are most commonly (74% of cases) implanted in men who suffer stress urinary incontinence because of injury to the distal urinary sphincter during prostatectomy for cancer (radical or transurethral resection) or benign prostatic hypertrophy (simple or transurethral resection).⁴ Less common indications for placement of an artificial sphincter include neurogenic sphincter incompetence (secondary to spina bifida, spinal cord injury, and pelvic fracture), female stress urinary incontinence secondary to intrinsic sphincter deficiency, and rarely for bladder exstrophy-epispadias patients.

The AMS Sphincter 800 has three basic components: an inflatable occlusive cuff implanted around the bladder neck or bulbar urethra, a reservoir balloon that regulates the occlusive pressure in the cuff, and a control assembly/pump containing an on/off button to allow deactivation of the device (Fig. 1, left side). The occlusive cuff is almost exclusively implanted around the bulbar urethra in the post-prostatectomy patients, and around the bladder neck in the remaining patients (women and neurogenic patients). The tissue around the bulbar urethra is thinner than the bladder neck tissue. Therefore, post-prostatectomy patients with sphincter cuffs implanted around the bulbar urethra are at higher risk of cuff erosion when catheterization and instrumentation are performed.

In order to void, patients with an AMS Sphincter 800 squeeze the control assembly, located in the labium in women or hemiscrotum in men, thereby hydraulically transferring isotonic contrast solution (or saline) from the cuff to the reservoir (Fig. 1). Each squeeze transfers a small bolus of fluid, and once the cuff is evacuated by repetitive squeezes, the control assembly/pump remains dimpled (Fig.

1, right side). With the cuff deflated, the patient can void or catheterize the urethra. The cuff then slowly refills over a period of approximately three minutes as fluid moves from the pressure reservoir across a resistor in the pump assembly back to the cuff (Fig. 2, next page). The refill process commences with refilling of the control pump, a process that can be monitored by watching the dimple in the pump slowly fill out.

Pressing the deactivation button at any point stops the refill process and locks fluid in the pressure reservoir. Hence, the device can be deactivated with the cuff deflated by pressing the button prior to filling of the cuff (Fig. 3, next page). Reactivation of the device is accomplished by giving the control pump a hard squeeze to open the locked resistor mechanism. It is important to deactivate the device only after partial refilling of the pump has taken place, otherwise there will be no fluid in the pump to squeeze and open the resistor mechanism. Should this event occur, the resistor can be opened by pressing the pump on the side opposite the deactivation button or by distorting this part of the pump by bending it.

One problem that we have encountered commonly is deactivation of the device with a partially filled cuff. This occurs when the deactivation button is pressed too soon, before all of the fluid in the cuff has been transferred to the reservoir. If urethral instrumentation is performed with such a partially filled cuff, there may be compromise of tissue vascularity, ultimately leading to cuff erosion. To avoid this, the pump must be squeezed until it remains totally collapsed (dimpled), indicating that the cuff has been totally evacuated, and the deactivation button only pressed after partial pump refilling has occurred as described above.

The deactivation mode is used during the early post-operative phase after implantation of the device when tissues are edematous and manipulation of the pump is painful. Deactivation of the device with the cuff in the deflated mode allows revascularization of the dissected urethra at the cuff site.

The AMS Sphincter 800 is relatively trouble-free (the five-year reliability rating exceeds 90%^{2,3}). Potential post-operative complications include hematoma, urinary retention, infection, and cuff erosion. Urethral cuff erosion can result from infection or pressure necrosis. As in the two cases we have summarized, clinical symptoms include: recurrent incontinence, genital pain, painful voiding, or systemic manifestations of infection. Noteworthy physical findings include: visible erosion of the cuff through the skin; induration; urethral bleeding; hematuria; tenderness or erythema around the cuff site, tubing, or pump; and purulent drainage in the groin or perineum.

Each squeeze of the control assembly/pump transfers a bolus of fluid from the cuff to the pressure balloon where the fluid is sequestered. Once the cuff is totally emptied the control pump will remain concavely dimpled (inset bottom).

Fig 2 (left): Slow refill of the cuff occurs over a period of about three minutes. The control assembly/pump fills first with loss of dimpling. Fig 3 (right): Pressing the deactivation button (large arrow) stops the refill process, locking fluid in the pressure balloon and facilitating safe urethral instrumentation. To deactivate the system with the cuff deflated, the cuff should be evacuated as described in Figs 1 and 2 and the deactivation button pressed when partial refill of the control assembly/pump has occurred.

Should a patient with an implanted sphincter become incontinent, we obtain an abdominal radiograph to demonstrate any fluid loss from the reservoir (indicating a leak in the hydraulic system).⁴ If there is no fluid loss but cuff erosion is suspected, careful urethroscopy is diagnostic. A retrograde urethrogram may reveal extravasation of contrast medium around an eroded cuff, but we avoid this study because it may infect a sterile erosion. It is our policy to surgically remove all components of the device if the urine culture is not sterile or if gross infection is evident at the time of exploration (as in Case 1). If cuff erosion is due to a non-infectious cause such as pressure necrosis, then only the cuff is removed, the tubing plugged, and reimplantation scheduled at a later date (as in Case 2). Iatrogenic cuff erosion can be obviated by deactivating the cuff before carrying out any urethral manipulation such as urinary catheterization or cystoscopy. Patients with a cuff implanted around the bulbar urethra, particularly those with post-prostatectomy incontinence, may be more prone to urethral erosion as a result of traumatic or prolonged catheter placement even when the device is deactivated in a deflate mode.

Barrett recommends that, if prolonged urethral catheter drainage will be required, then percutaneous suprapubic tube placement using fluoroscopy or ultrasound guidance may avoid injury.³

We recommend that, if it is necessary to catheterize a patient with an artificial urinary sphincter, you should: 1) Consult a urologist familiar with the artificial urinary sphincter. 2) Give broad spectrum antibiotics prophylactically and continue them throughout the course of catheter drainage. 3) Deactivate the device in the deflated mode until the catheter is removed. 4) Use the smallest urethral catheter possible (12 or 14 French) to preclude urethral trauma and pressure necrosis. 5) Insert a percutaneous suprapubic tube under fluoroscopy or ultrasound guidance if prolonged urinary drainage is indicated.

Finally, all patients with an AMS Sphincter 800 artificial urinary sphincter should wear a medical alert medallion at all times. They should inform any treating physicians that appropriate precautions must be taken whenever urethral instrumentation, such as catheterization, is indicated. □

Choices and Chances for Health Care Reform

Charles A. Speas Phillips, MD

Spiraling health care costs concern almost every family in the United States, where it is estimated that one person in four dies in bankruptcy, in part because of large medical bills. Financial and functional access to health care is a problem for many Americans—especially the 37 million with no health insurance and all those who are underinsured.

In this article I will examine how major systems are organized to deliver health care, what they cost, how they assure access, and possibilities for reforms to improve health care delivery and cost control in the U.S.

National Health Care Systems

Canada. The Canadian system^{1,2} is the only completely socialized medical system. All people are covered so that all have equal access. The government is the single payor. Private health insurance is not allowed.

Federal sources fund much of the Canadian system but, under the Canadian constitution, the provinces are individually responsible for health and education. Consequently, there are 10 separate provincial systems. In order for the federal government to share costs with the provinces, the Canadian Medical Care Act of 1966 specifies that medical care must be:

Comprehensive. It must cover a full range of hospital and medical services, with rare exceptions such as cosmetic surgery.

Universal. It must cover all permanent residents regardless of their ability to pay.

Portable. Canadians must retain coverage when they move from province to province.

Accessible. There must be reasonable access regardless of the ability to pay.

Public. Not-for-profit and provincial plans must be publicly administered.

Dr. Phillips, of Pinehurst, is a retired surgeon and provides primary care at McCain Correctional Hospital.

The Canadian system uses about 8.5% of the Gross National Product (GNP), and taxes support the cost of health care. People with high income pay more tax and a larger share of health care costs.

Each year, the government determines how much money to spend on health care, then medical organizations decide how to spend it. Politicians have little control over how the money will be spent. Physicians negotiate pay schedules with the provinces and determine among themselves the relative pay for each practitioner. As a result, intense negotiation among physicians has reduced the differences in payments to various specialists.

Patients choose their own physician, and physicians are paid promptly after completing relatively little paperwork other than providing the diagnosis and treatment rendered.

The principal disadvantages of the system are the long waiting periods for some diagnostic and therapeutic procedures and the relative scarcity of diagnostic aids such as radiographic scanners. Many Canadians who want rapid access to quality medical care, especially surgical procedures, come to the U.S. Many Canadian physicians emigrate because they are dissatisfied. Taxpayers complain about the high tax burden.

Great Britain. The United Kingdom system³ resembles the Canadian, but private insurance companies are allowed. The proportion of citizens who are privately insured has gradually risen to about 10% since socialized medicine was instituted in the late 1940s.

British patients choose their primary care physician. Physicians are paid based on the number of patients they serve rather than by a fee for service. When patients require hospitalization, their primary care physicians refer them to hospitals where only specialists practice. Specialists may also serve private patients, and their fees are paid by the patient or by an insurance company. The English system attempts to introduce competition by providing a choice of institutions for referrals.

The English system uses about 6% of the GNP, the lowest percentage of any major medical system. Although patients must wait for some elective procedures, there are few complaints from physicians or patients. The consensus opinion is that things are better now than before socialization.

Germany. The German system⁴ has been the best of all major systems at controlling cost increases over the years; costs, about 8% of the GNP, have increased in proportion to the GNP.

Germany's successful scheme blends government-mandated financing by employers and employees, the provision for private care by physicians, and the control of hospital expenditures, under administration of some 1,100 not-for-profit insurance organizations (known as sickness funds). There is a sharp distinction between primary (ambulatory) care and hospital care. Primary care physicians are paid on a fee-for-service basis; hospital physicians (specialists) are employed by hospitals and paid a salary.

Employees contribute a portion of their salary toward health care; higher-paid employees pay proportionately more for the same services. About 8% of the population—with incomes above $36,500—is privately insured. The government pays the cost of care for the indigent and unemployed. Sickness funds distribute their revenue to regional associations of ambulatory care physicians, which reimburse doctors for services on the basis of a negotiated fee schedule. Sickness funds also negotiate with hospitals for a per diem rate.

The United States. The American system³ has seen costs spiral out of control in recent years. We now spend nearly 15% of our GNP for health care. Payment in the U.S. is the most varied of all the major systems. The government uses tax revenue to provide care for the indigent (11% of the population); for the military, veterans, and some minorities (14%); and, through Medicare, for the aged and some disabled citizens (17%). This socialized sector thus covers 42% of the U.S. population.

In the remaining 58% of the population, less than 10% pay for their care directly although many pay for a portion of the cost of care (drugs, appliances, etc.) out of pocket. Approximately 33% of the population is covered by private insurance; 15% is uninsured.

Access to care is an increasing problem. About 37 million people have no health insurance; an additional large number are without insurance because they are between jobs (many will be excluded from insurance under new employers because they have preexisting conditions). Many more are underinsured.

There are functional and financial barriers to access. Hospital emergency rooms have become the point of access for a large number of patients who have no primary care physician or whose physician is unavailable. A few decades ago patients had a general practitioner who acted as physician, counselor, guardian, friend, and adviser—someone to whom they looked for their total medical needs, or for referral to a specialist when necessary. The warm and friendly patient-physician relationship that once existed has been severely eroded. Many physicians now practice as specialists while trying to act as primary care physicians simultaneously.

Patients are in a quandary about where to seek medical care. How do they get to see an appropriate physician for their symptoms? Who is best qualified to resolve this dilemma—government, physicians, or the patients themselves? The U.S. has more physicians, more medical equipment, more hospital beds per capita than almost any other country. Quality has not been a problem, although recently the U.S. has fallen below several other countries on some statistical measures.

Cost of Medical Care in the U.S.

Until early 1960, medical care consumed a respectable 5.3% of the GNP. In 1965, Medicare was established. In order to make this move toward socialized medicine palatable, the government paid physicians their "usual and customary charges." This allowed physicians to charge almost anything they desired.

The California Medical Society, in an attempt to standardize payments in the 1960s, established the California Relative Value Schedule which related the cost of medical services to an office visit. Physicians generally supported this system, but the government ruled it a violation of the anti-trust laws—a second poor decision that followed the adoption of the "usual and customary" fee schedule. (Now the government is asking physicians to standardize fees!)

The government further adversely influenced matters when it permitted hospitals to include capitalization costs in calculating daily charges. The resulting high rates then had to be partially controlled by paying hospitals a fixed amount for a given diagnosis (Disease Related Group, or DRG-based payments), which created an incentive to discharge patients as early as possible. Hospital stays have declined over the past 15 years due to improved care and the introduction of DRGs. On the other hand, the government passed the Hill-Burton Bill which resulted in the over-building of hospital beds, encouraging overuse to keep beds occupied.

In the beginning, medical insurance companies were largely non-profit. However in the 1960s, with unions demanding health insurance coverage from employers, a large number of for-profit insurance companies appeared. They increased the number of third-party members and contributed to the deterioration of the once healthy patient-physician relationship. Unions demanded increasingly extensive health care coverage, often meeting little resistance from industry since health care premiums were tax deductible. The cost of many of these insurance packages exceeded the national average cost of health care and, since the patient paid only a deductible, there was no incentive to try to save on amounts above the deductible.

Now many corporations say their profits are being eroded by the expensive health care benefits promised to employees and retirees. The ability of large corporations to provide great health care benefits, on which employees were not taxed, resulted in a great inequity among taxpayers. Employees of small businesses who paid a part or all of their own health care insurance premiums received no similar tax benefit.

Advances in medical technology have spawned many increases in costs. High-voltage radiation therapy, Computerized Tomography, Magnetic Resonance Imaging, intensive care units, and complicated cardiac surgical and transplant procedures have improved medical care. But ready access to this technology has greatly increased the overall cost of care.

Physicians have sometimes profited from financing many of these expensive medical items. The American Medical Association has addressed the potential for conflict of interest through overuse. The AMA House of Delegates initially considered self referral a conflict of interest, but later reversed this stand to permit continued ownership and self referral under certain conditions.

In a country like ours that espouses equal opportunity, what should be done to reduce the wide disparity of health care services, tax credits, and cost to various groups of people? Americans spend more than $800 billion a year for health care (about $3,500 per person). This should be adequate to provide excellent health care for every citizen, including the group that has received the most media attention: the uninsured. We must find a way to provide good medical care for all at no increase in total cost. I believe that we can do it without new programs and probably without an overall tax increase (Table I). Taxpayers and the insured now pay for the hospital costs of the uninsured through cost shifting. Rationing and better use of medical care dollars can provide health care for our uninsured. According to

Consumer Reports,⁵ eliminating waste alone would provide more than enough money.

Choices for Reform: National or State Initiatives?

Enacting health reform at a national level would provide uniformity throughout the nation and portability from state to state and from job to job. Certain federal expenditures such as the military budget might be reduced or taxes raised on sales of tobacco and alcohol to pay for any increase in health care costs.

The eroding of business profits due to increasing health care costs makes it imperative that we control the increasing cost of care. Unfortunately, President Clinton's proposal puts an enormous financial burden on employers, particularly small businesses, with little protection despite some proposed subsidies. It is equally imperative to remove inequities that now exist in tax benefits between employer-paid and self-paid health insurance premiums. The responsibility should rest on the individual to choose the health care package that is most cost effective.

National legislation. The many bills pending in Congress follow three basic models:

Single payor—similar to the Canadian System,

Play or pay—in which employer pays the tab, and

Consumer choice—which uses tax credits or vouchers to give consumers a direct financial incentive in improving access to and in decreasing the costs of health care. For example the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program serves about nine million federal workers, including members of Congress and retirees. Participants shop from a large number of managed care programs to find a cost-efficient health care provider.

State initiatives. Several states have given up waiting for Congress to act on health care reform. In 1988, Massachusetts passed a "play or pay" program, but it has proved a disaster for businesses. Oregon has an excellent initiative that will help evaluate rationing and determine the cost of basic health care. The concept of rationing some non-essential services in order to provide basic medical care for all is now a reality. Vermont placed a "non-binding" cap on medical spending. Minnesota increased access to medical care by taxing medical care providers. Florida and Pennsylvania have passed some reforms. No state has provided a comprehensive reform package.

Maryland⁶ is involved with a "consumer choice" approach that many consider a model for the nation. It generally follows the plan of the Heritage Foundation and achieves four critical health care reform goals:

1. It provides universal and continuous access for all to standard insurance benefits without regard to employment or health status;
2. It uses competition to pressure insurers and health care providers to operate efficiently, and puts more purchasing

Table 1. Desirable characteristics in reforming a health care system

- Provide universal access
- Offer portable coverage from job to job and state to state.
- Do not deny coverage because of preexisting conditions.
- Allow individual choice of doctor or deliverer of health care (such as a managed care organization).
- Permit ability to shop for the best combination of quality and price in health coverage.
- Ration health care to eliminate unnecessary and ineffective procedures and stop care in vegetative states or when quality of life cannot be restored.
- Place responsibility for health care on the individual, not the employer. Employers may pay premiums on behalf of individuals, but any tax benefit from premiums paid should be the same for those who are self-insured.
- Increase the number of generalists or primary care physicians who can act as patient advocates, provide referrals for specialists and special procedures, and serve as gatekeepers to the system.
- Improve the policy framework for the delivery of health care. The AMA should promote this by encouraging physicians to function as specialists or generalists, not both.
- Control increases or promote reduction in health care costs.

- power in the hands of consumers;
3. It is "budget neutral" and uses an equitable financing method;
 4. It preserves what is good about our system: the fostering of competition and innovation; the development of technology; the right that Americans value so highly—to choose doctors they trust, without long waits for care.

Besides the Maryland plan, another excellent possibility is the Medical Cost Containment Act of 1992 (S 2873, HR 5250) which would establish Medical Care Savings Accounts (a form of IRA). The consumer choice aspects would do much to control cost, promote tax fairness, and allow portability from job to job.

Political Preamble to Health Care Reform

The wonderful doctor-patient relationship that existed for almost two centuries in this country has steadily deteriorated due to invasion by government, insurance companies, and lawyers. How have we developed such a multiplicity of medical systems and suffered such spiraling costs? Government intervention and interference are the most significant factors. Too much government has been the worst culprit.

Special interest groups, whose Political Action Committees influence politicians through contributions for their election, have had a profound effect on national and state legislation passed or prevented from being passed. The actions of these groups have delayed effective health care reform.

To correct this situation, we must reform our political system by: 1) removing long-term incumbents who are so controlled by special interests that they cannot provide the necessary legislation to reform health care; 2) reducing the impact of special interests by disallowing PAC contributions to candidates; 3) limiting terms for all legislators; and 4) reducing the numbers of special interest groups that may serve as legislators (lawyers specifically) so that no one group or profession has a legislative monopoly.

Voters must become involved in elections and responsible for changes that are needed to improve our national and state governments. North Carolina is the only state in the nation without veto power for the governor. To promote more harmonious functioning, the Governor and Lieutenant Governor should be elected as a team and all members of the Council of State should be appointed, rather than half elected and half appointed as they are now.

We should have single-member districts, and districts should include entire counties as required by our state constitution. Until voters elect legislators who will work primarily for the interests of voters, there is little chance for effective reform in health care or improvement in the many other areas that need improvement like education, environment, crime reduction, spending, and taxation.

Election and government reform and health care reform should occur simultaneously. Solutions will be slow coming and should take place through evolution, not by revolution (we should not replace our present system with a "Canadian system"). Solutions should be flexible. Competition between the private and socialized sector should be allowed to resolve the present lack of consensus as to which health care reform approach we should take. Of course, competition may not solve all problems (for example, two competing hospitals in a town not large enough to need full medical services). Renewed use of Certificates of Need may help control costs in such situations.

Supporters of socialized medicine suggest that we eliminate private health care insurance completely because major problems exist. Blue Cross and Blue Shield (non-profit) insurance companies return more than 90% of their premiums compared with a lesser amount from for-profit companies. Private enterprise is often more efficient and may provide more benefits at lower premiums. We should work with private insurers to identify deficiencies in their industry and correct them rather than doing away with private insurance.

We should keep government interference to a minimum, providing only enough socialization to cover those who cannot provide for themselves. This means expanding

"Until voters elect legislators who will work primarily for the interests of voters, there is little chance for effective reform in health care or improvement in the many other areas that need improvement...."

Medicaid but no new programs.

Improved access to primary care physicians can be improved by patient education and by incentives to increase the number of primary care physicians who will serve as gatekeepers.

Cost Control

Table 2, next page, outlines health care cost control for the state and lists aspects of tort reform. The large number of huge court awards in malpractice suits significantly increases the cost of health care. Insurance companies pay the awards from premiums paid by doctors who then pass the costs on to patients. In addition, costs are greatly increased by the defensive medicine that practitioners and hospitals feel is necessary to protect themselves from malpractice suits. Malpractice premiums plus the cost of defensive medicine are estimated to represent 15% of the total cost of medical care. The use of standard practice guidelines will reduce excessive defensive practice and help protect physicians from frivolous lawsuits.

knowledge does not constitute "peer justice" for the resolution of malpractice claims. Canada and Great Britain use medically knowledgeable judicial panels to provide "peer justice." It makes sense that physicians should receive a trial by their peers, not by those who do not know medicine. Many states permit Alternate Dispute Resolution by panels of medically informed jurists who provide arbitration for patients claiming to have suffered injury from treatment. ADR panels screen cases and settle disputes where medical malpractice is not the issue.

The history of Worker's Compensation provides a good example of how to solve a problem similar to our present malpractice crisis. When the very existence of industries was threatened by large settlements for workers against employers, legislators set up a Worker's Compensation Commission to resolve these disputes. This process has worked for many years. We should consider a similar solution for malpractice claims.

Risk pooling is another excellent mechanism for dealing with certain cases of injury sustained during health care delivery. North Carolina is considering legislation to provide an award to families of infants born with neurological injury such as cerebral palsy. Most cases of anoxia or injury during the birth are mishaps of nature, not neglect of physicians, nurses, midwives, or hospitals. The very few cases of actual malpractice could be dealt with adequately after screening by ADR panels.

In England, an unsuccessful plaintiff pays the defendant's expenses. We should use this mechanism to reduce the number of frivolous lawsuits.

Contingency fees are necessary to provide access to legal advice for the indigent, but there could easily be a cap on the magnitude of settlements. At present, the lawyer can receive 30% or more of the award, and often spends a relatively small amount of time to earn that compensation. Many states have placed caps on the awards for pain and suffering; North Carolina should consider this cost control method.

Lawyers have the scales of justice tilted in their favor. With a better balance of physicians to lawyers in the halls of government, we will have a better chance of passing legislation to reduce the inequities that now exist. Legislation to resolve problems with the health care insurance industry are likewise appropriate for our state's lawmakers.

Reducing government interference could decrease the cost of medical care by up to 25% ($200 billion) according to Consumers Reports.⁵ This figure sounds high but most authorities agree that there is plenty of room for reducing red tape and the cost incurred in the delivery of medical care.

Health care has been rationed in the past. Ethics committees in hospitals and nursing homes can provide patients, their families, and doctors with adequate information, support, and direction to stop the prolongation of vegetative existence. We need to stop medical care that does not improve the caliber of life in terminal illness. Euthanasia may be an option in highly selected cases. The Oregon initiative may help us to evaluate rationing and to determine the cost of basic health care.

Fraud and abusive self-referrals must be stopped. Physicians should be given adequate time to dispose of their interests where potential profit from self referral exists.

Physicians deserve to be well paid for their knowledge, skill, education, and years of preparation just as are lawyers, executives, and investors. Over the years, the percentage of the total cost of medical care paid to physicians has remained constant at about 19%. The majority of physicians generally wish for medical care reform. Concurrent reform of government and health care delivery and legislation providing universal access and cost control are overdue and essential. □

Manuscript Preparation

Prepare papers according to the "Uniform Requirements for Manuscripts Submitted to Biomedical Journals" (N Engl J Med 1991;324:424-8) with these exceptions: 1) no abstract; 2) no running title; and 3) report measurements in metric units; the International System of Units (SI) is optional.

Type text (including Letters to the Editor) with one-inch margins and double space. Title page should include address, and phone and fax numbers of corresponding author. Submit two copies or a cover letter and a 3 1/2- or 5 1/4-inch computer disc with text written in MS DOS compatible format (WordPerfect, Microsoft Word, Displaywrite, or ASCII).

Submit illustrations, in duplicate, as color 35mm slides or photos, or as black-and-white photos. Label them with author's name, note position in the text, and indicate image orientation. Do not write on the backs of prints. This damages them. Type legends separately. Type tables, double-spaced, one to a page. Tables must have titles and consecutive Arabic numbers.

Minimize references (no more than 15 if possible, preferably 10 or fewer). The "Uniform Requirements" cited above contain the format for references. Authors are responsible for the accuracy and pertinence of all citations. Avoid abbreviations if possible, or keep them to a minimum. When used, completely define abbreviations at the first usage in the text.

Manuscript Editing

A medically qualified editor reads manuscripts, and most are also reviewed by members of the NC Medical Society. Submitted manuscripts must not be under consideration for publication elsewhere. Decisions to publish are made by the editors, advised by peer reviewers.

We encourage a relatively informal writing style since we believe this improves communication. Imagine yourself talking with your audience—as long as this doesn't lead you to scientific or linguistic inaccuracy. Be brief, clear, simple, and precise.

We edit accepted manuscripts for clarity, style, and conciseness. Authors receive a copy of the edited manuscript for approval before publication.

Authors retain copyright to articles published in the NC Medical Journal, but the NC Medical Society copyrights the contents of each issue. Access to Medications for Low-Income North Carolina Citizens Without Funds, How Can They Follow Doctor's Orders?

Gina Upchurch, RPh, MPH, Jo Anne L. Earp, ScD, and Susan J. Blalock, PhD

The costs of prescription medications represent a great financial burden for persons with low incomes because they must pay a large percentage of the incurred expenses directly out of pocket (unlike, for example, hospital care). In recent years, prescription drug prices have risen at a rate three to five times that of inflation.¹ As a result, low-income citizens in North Carolina often find it difficult to "follow doctor's orders" when these include the purchase of medications. The availability of a single, well-publicized state medication assistance program might improve access to services, decrease overall health care costs, and increase consumer satisfaction.

Medications for the Indigent

Insurance programs sometimes cover the cost of medications, but the poorest Americans form a large proportion of the 37 million who do not have medical insurance.² In North Carolina, Medicaid reimburses pharmacies for up to six prescriptions a month for "qualified" individuals, but in 1990 only 563,000 (65%) of the 861,770 North Carolinians living at or below the federal poverty level received Medicaid.³ This means that nearly 300,000 North Carolinians—officially designated as "poor"—received no assistance with the purchase of prescription medications. Medicare, available to all citizens over 65, provides no assistance for purchase of retail medications. Individuals who do not qualify for Medicaid can get assistance with the purchase of prescription drugs in 10 states, but not in North Carolina. Nine of those 10 state programs are targeted at people 65 and older; PACE (Pharmaceutical Assistance Contract for the Elderly) in Pennsylvania is the largest.⁴

prehensive medication program for indigent patients, there are, in addition to Medicaid, several programs to assist low-income persons. These programs vary from community to community, each having its own idiosyncrasies, and no one distinctly better than any other. Several communities in the state have managed to "take care of their own" by improving access to medications for low-income citizens, but many others lack medication assistance programs. As a result, our existing "system" is a patchwork that leaves many low-income North Carolinians without prescription medications. Even in those communities that do have programs, efforts to improve access to medications may be duplicated, solutions fragmented, or only a limited amount of assistance provided.

President Clinton's proposed Health Security Act would provide outpatient prescription drugs as part of the standard benefits program for all ages. The program would be administered through regional health alliances and through a new outpatient prescription drug benefit that would form part of a new Medicare Part B (as optional coverage with monthly premiums). Both the proposed Health Security Act and the new Medicare coverage would require a $250 deductible and 20% cost-sharing,⁵ requirements that would exclude many North Carolinians. The Act currently proposes that states provide subsidies to lowest-income individuals, but whether North Carolina legislators will choose to subsidize medication costs is unknown. The Health Security Act is likely to undergo extensive revision and, even if implemented, it is not clear that existing state programs will be usurped. At best, implementation of any federal program will take several years. In the meantime, North Carolina has the chance to establish its own medication assistance program. Sensitivity to local nuances would put a state program more in touch with, and hence responsive to, community ownership and control; ultimately, it might serve North Carolina citizens better than a federally mandated program.

In order to set the framework for the future, we used policy analysis to assess nine existing North Carolina programs that assist, or have been proposed to assist, low-income persons in obtaining prescription medications.

Policy Analysis

Policy analysis involves choosing evaluative criteria and systematically applying these criteria to each of several policies (or programs). As with all research, policy analysis is not value-free; the criteria chosen reflect the analyst's values. As with other types of qualitative research, the researcher (or analyst) becomes the "instrument."⁶ There is no "gold standard" by which to examine programs designed to help low-income persons obtain medications, so the challenge of our policy analysis was to define evaluative criteria and then apply them systematically to each program.

User preference: client judgments about different programs relative to the following dimensions:

- freedom*—the ability to choose medical services
- stigma*—identification of clients as "poor" by virtue of participation in the program
- satisfaction*—perceptions of continuity and quality of care

Efficiency: the balance between program benefits and costs; the best use of tangible (money and supplies) and intangible (people and their time) resources:

- benefits*—positive effects of the programs
- implementation costs*—direct costs to run the program
- outcome costs*⁷—costs generated by program (change in quality of care for clients, lost business for pharmacies)

Equity: the fair sharing of programmatic resources and burdens:

- horizontal equity*—"equal treatment of equals"⁸
- vertical equity*—"unequal treatment of persons unequally situated, so as to make their situations more nearly equal"⁸

Long-term feasibility: the possibility of providing medication beyond the current decade, looking at:

- positive community response*—promoting "ownership" of a program
- negative community response*—opposition to a program
- uncertainty*—political and financial likelihood of program success

Each program was rated according to four evaluative criteria: user preference, efficiency, equity, and long-term feasibility (Table 1). User preference was analyzed solely from the perspective of a low-income individual, but the other three criteria were analyzed from pharmacists' and prescribers' as well as clients' point of view. Prescribers were defined as physicians, nurse practitioners, or physician's assistants. Programs were rated on a scale of 1 (low) to 5 (high) for each of the four criteria (Table 2, right). The application of scores or ratings of programs by several different criteria is not traditional in policy analysis; we used it to help translate academic observation into programmatic recommendations.

We looked at the following nine kinds of programs: pharmaceutical industry indigent care programs, freestanding "free" pharmacies, "free" medical clinics, hospital/community clinics, distribution of drug samples given to physicians, Social Service Department financing of drug purchase, non-profit organization financing, retail pharmacy voucher/card systems, and the NC Prescription Drug Assistance Program.

Funds for the analysis were provided by the Services to Senior Citizens Task Force (sponsored by the Durham County Hospital Corporation) and the Council for Senior Citizens of Durham, as part of a needs assessment and feasibility study for a "free" pharmacy in Durham. We did not specifically examine all programs that help low-income persons pay for medications, but virtually every program in the state (excluding Health Department pharmacies) can be categorized into one of the nine chosen program types. Within a single program type (say, hospital/community clinics for low-income citizens), we selected one or two specific NC programs as examples; for instance, Lincoln Community Health Center in Durham served as the example of the hospital/community clinics category.

A Look at North Carolina Programs

Table 2 shows that only one program received a score of 5 (high) on any dimension. A number of programs received scores of 4, but none fulfilled the "requirements" of all criteria. By our assessment, no program totally satisfied everyone (clients, pharmacists, prescribers) along every criterion sub-dimension (such as benefits and costs, or vertical and horizontal equity). Each program involves trade-offs in one dimension or another, producing different impacts on the three groups examined.

Hospital/Community Clinics. These clinics, aimed at low-income patients, offer many advantages over the other programs examined, one of which is that they provide more than just acute care pharmacy services, and sometimes dispense a full line of medications. These clinics often also offer continuity of service by providing primary care, diagnostic tests, and prescription medications at one site. Although hospital/community clinics rated highest on our four criteria, it seems unlikely that a private enterprise health industry will encourage the expansion of indigent care that relies on tax dollars while private practitioners (prescribers and pharmacists) "lose business." Financial support for a national or "public" primary care system that includes the provision of medications for those with low incomes is unlikely to happen any time soon, even though it may be "cost effective" for society. For this reason, and despite the fact that hospital/community clinics have been around a long time and will probably continue, even prosper, they were rated only "3" on the dimension of long-term feasibility. Their expansion to cover other groups in need is not likely to occur in the climate of today's marketplace.

Prescription Drug Assistance Program. We question the viability of the four next "best" alternatives (the proposed Prescription Drug Assistance Program, voucher systems, "free" pharmacies, and "free" medical clinics). It seems unlikely that the Prescription Drug Assistance Program, as proposed, will be implemented. Dr. James Green (D-Vance County) has introduced the Prescription Drug Assistance Act three times and, although this program rates highest (5) on the criterion of user preference, focus groups and one-on-one interviews identified opposition from pharmacists. Many pharmacists feel that they would be subsidizers of the program because the proposed reimbursement rate is similar to that of Medicaid. One pharmacist expressed his frustration thusly: "I have a real problem with [The Prescription Drug Assistance Program] because it only targets pharmacy. There are a lot of places you could save money in the health care system that would save these people money, that would more enable them to buy their medication."

Pharmacists argue that cost-control efforts often propose only changes at the dispensing level, which thereby reduce dispensing fees. They feel that they will not be fairly reimbursed for their knowledge or educational services (for monitoring drug interactions and counseling patients). Some pharmacists argue that there is little pressure on physicians to prescribe less expensive medications or, until recently, pressure on pharmaceutical manufacturers to control prices. There is confusion, as well as some resentment, about the proposal that only certain disease-specific medications be covered by the Prescription Drug Assistance Program.

Voucher Systems. Each of the two voucher systems examined in our analysis (the Filling in Gaps [FIGS] program of Wake County and the proposed Senior PharmAssist program of Durham County) has advantages and disadvantages. Voucher systems provide an identification card (voucher) informing participating pharmacies that clients may charge medications to the sponsoring agency. The proposed Durham program makes an effort to control its costs by: 1) limiting access to senior citizens; 2) setting reimbursement fees to pharmacies; 3) creating a geriatric medication formulary; and 4) establishing well-defined financial eligibility criteria. In order to control program costs, however, the Durham program requires sacrifices: younger individuals are not served, prescribers must be cognizant of and use the formulary, and pharmacy profit margins may be reduced. The Senior PharmAssist program proposes continuous assistance, recertifying recipients at six-month intervals, but FIGS clients must reapply each time they need assistance. The Durham voucher system will use a computer to allow coordination of medication regimens between different retail pharmacies. Statewide funding of a Durham-type program, designed to cover all low-income individuals (however defined), might ameliorate the problems those individuals have in obtaining medication. Dispensing through retail pharmacies would lessen any stigma for users while capitalizing on a medication distribution system that is already in place.

Freestanding "Free" Pharmacies. There are three freestanding "free" pharmacies in North Carolina (in Winston-Salem, Greensboro, and Hickory). They make a bold attempt (using dedicated volunteers) to provide medications to people who otherwise might go without. In policy analysis terms, there are three major concerns about "free" pharmacies: 1) there may be stigma attached to patronizing them since the clients are identified as "poor;" 2) "free" pharmacy clients are often already part of a fragmented system of care and the use of such pharmacies, disconnected from medical clinics or "normal" prescription distribution routes, adds another in a series of disjointed providers; 3) this "solution" relies heavily on the use of physicians' samples, which may become less plentiful because of mounting pressure on pharmaceutical companies to decrease costs and "waste" (the diversion of samples to non-paying clients).¹⁰ Notwithstanding these reservations, "free" pharmacies currently are "life savers" for many low-income persons in at least three North Carolina cities.

"Free" Medical Clinics. Many "free" medical clinics make medications available to low-income individuals. These clinics share some of the problems of freestanding "free" pharmacies; there is a stigma attached to patronizing them and they also rely heavily on availability of drug samples. Many "free" medical clinics dispense medication to a limited number of clients (constrained by the size of their volunteer staff) during a small number of hours (usually several evenings on specified days).

Other Programs. The other four types of programs we examined (pharmaceutical industry programs, programs relying solely on distribution of physicians' sample medications, and programs with social service or non-profit organization financing) did not rate high by our criteria (Table 2). In theory, pharmaceutical industry programs make some medications available to low-income persons but, in practice, these programs are procedurally cumbersome which impedes use. Prescribers often have to fill out requisition forms, registering one patient at a time, for one drug at a time. Then, if the patient qualifies (program qualification standards vary and are not publicized), the medication is sent not to the patient but to the prescriber who must deliver it.¹¹ Finally, programs that simply dispense medications obtained as physicians' samples, or that rely on client requests for financial assistance from social service or non-profit organizations are neither efficient nor user friendly. These programs provide "quick fixes" rather than long-term solutions, but they are important to a small number of clients.

Conclusion

Our review and analysis of pharmaceutical services for low-income persons in North Carolina reveals a fragmented, geographically variable, and less than optimal set of "solutions." Ironically, these "solutions" may preclude, or at least retard, the emergence of a viable, statewide program. The very presence of even fragmented programs (such as our present, de facto, "medication assistance system") impedes the emergence of innovative statewide solutions that could serve as a model for a comprehensive system. Communities that already have some type of program feel little pressure to build coalitions with communities that have none; vested interests in existing programs have little impetus to adopt new programs. It will be unfortunate if no collective voice emerges at the state level since pooled efforts would probably be more cost-effective overall and more equitable.

Our findings suggest that hospital/community clinics that provide medical care in addition to medications are the best presently available option. They provide low-income citizens with comprehensive care, including pharmacy services, at reduced prices and under one roof. Because a privatized health care system is a valued American tradition, such clinics probably are not a feasible statewide solution. Retail pharmacy voucher systems using cost-control measures may be a better answer. The proposed Durham County card/voucher program is similar to Rep. Green's Prescription Drug Assistance Program, but would cover medications for a wider range of diseases and conditions. But no matter which program North Carolina eventually adopts, it should be formally evaluated in order to ensure that it meets as many needs of clients, pharmacists, and prescribers as possible.

Obtaining medications is often difficult, if not impossible, for some citizens. The reasons given to explain this have focused on the cost of medications, rather than the present, fragmented "method" of dispensing them. Uncoordinated medication regimens are themselves a matter of public health concern, especially for the elderly who use a disproportionate fraction of medications.¹² In this day of specialists, no single provider may have a complete picture of a patient's daily medication regimen. Uncoordinated dispensing is not only dangerous, but costly because adverse drug effects result in substantial cost to the health care system. One study found that 9% of all patients and 12% of elderly patients admitted to a community hospital came because of a drug-induced illness.¹³

"The very presence of even fragmented programs...impedes the emergence of innovative statewide solutions that could serve as a model for a comprehensive system."

The cost of medication accounts for approximately 7% of health care dollars, but we know little about the cost of iatrogenic admissions to hospitals and nursing homes because of adverse medication events.¹⁴ And we have almost no information about relationships between the cost of medications and noncompliance or about correlations between increased health care spending and adverse drug events. One might question whether drug compliance researchers and cost benefit analysts are asking or avoiding the most politically charged research questions. A state level program to help low-income North Carolinians obtain medications would allow us to combine accessibility with coordination and to collect the data to assure that we do not trade one set of problems and adverse outcomes for another. □

GETTING CONTROL

Stress may be the one of the greatest contributors to illness in the United States. Approximately two-thirds of office visits to family physicians are related to unrelieved stress and its effects on the mind and body.

What is Stress?

What do you think of when you hear the word "stress"? Well, one thing is certain—there are as many different ideas about stress as there are people who experience change in their lives. Because stress, quite simply, is the way you react—physically and emotionally—to change. Like change, stress can be either positive or negative. Stress may be the sense of concentration you feel when faced with a new and challenging situation; it may be the vague sense of anxiety you feel after "one of those days."

Positive Stress

Positive stress can help you to concentrate, focus, perform and can often help you to reach peak efficiency. Many people, in fact, do their best work when under pressure. After the challenge has been met, they take the time to relax and enjoy their achievements. This relaxation response allows them to build up the physical and emotional reserves to meet the next challenge, and is one of the key elements of positive stress.

Negative Stress

Stress is negative when you stay "geared-up" and don't—or can't—relax after meeting the challenge. In today's world, where many situations can "push your buttons," it's no wonder some people think of stress as a way of life. Unfortunately, when stress becomes a constant, ongoing cycle, your health and well-being can suffer. Negative stress has been linked with many physical ailments—from tension headaches to heart attacks. The good news is that stress needn't be hazardous to your health. You can learn to manage the stress in your life, and you'll be happy that you did!!

Managing Stress

Regardless of how you define stress the most important thing is how you manage stressful situations. People vary greatly in the ways that they do this.

The first thing to remember is that stress is a fact of life, but it needn't be a way of life. There are many things in life that you simply can't control, but there are very few that you can't learn to manage, including the negative side of stress. The first step to managing stress is awareness of the things that make you feel stressed (stressors) and of the way you feel when under stress. Then, by learning and using simple relaxation techniques, you can balance the stress in your life with periods of relaxation. Finally, by developing a positive attitude and lifestyle, you can be a success at managing stress.

Awareness

You'd probably agree that in order to find an answer, it's helpful to know the problem! Well, in order to manage stress, it's helpful to know what causes your stress and how you feel when under stress. Try to identify the situations in your life that make you feel tense. Then, "listen" to your body for signs such as headaches, stomach upsets, tensed muscles, clenched teeth, cold or clammy hands, or other symptoms that tell you you're under stress.

Relaxation Techniques

As you know, stress can be positive when it is balanced with relaxation. However, when stress is constant and unrelieved, it can become negative and destructive. You can break the cycle of negative stress by learning ways to help yourself relax. By taking the time to practice simple relaxation techniques on a regular basis, you can give yourself a chance to unwind and get ready for life's next challenge.

Positive Attitude and Lifestyle

A positive attitude and lifestyle are key elements of stress management. Since stress is both an emotional and physical reaction to change, the better you feel—in body and mind—the better you'll be able to deal with the stress in your life. When you learn to think positively, exercise, eat well, and rest regularly, you'll be taking care of the most important person you know—you.

Recognizing the Problem

Becoming aware of stress is a two-fold process. First, try to recognize and identify the things in your life that cause you to feel stress. These stressors may be minor hassles, major lifestyle changes, or a combination of both. Then, once you realize what causes your stress, try to focus on how your body feels under stress. For example, you may know that getting caught in traffic is one of your stressors, but do you know how your body reacts? Are your muscles tense? Is your heart beating faster? Knowing your stressors, and listening to what your body can tell you, can help you become aware of your own individual stress reaction. This awareness, in turn, is the first step in finding solutions to the problem. Below are some of the more common stressors and possible solutions that address these.

Problem

Minor hassles are those daily annoyances that are a part of day-to-day life. Traffic jams, missed buses, lost car keys, and petty disagreements are rarely earth-shattering events, but their side effects can accumulate. Even these minor irritations can lead to chronic, negative stress and health-related problems, so be aware of situations that "get your blood pressure up."

Solution

Avoiding hassles can help you to eliminate some of the minor irritations that lead to chronic, negative stress. If rush-hour traffic "drives you up a wall," why not join (or start) a carpool, or try taking public transportation? If rushing to get to work on time makes you anxious, try getting up earlier, or look into taking a course in time management.

Problem

Major changes are any changes—positive or negative—that affect your lifestyle. Positive changes, like the birth of a new baby or a promotion, can be just as stressful as negative changes such as the loss of a loved one or being laid off from a job. Most major lifestyle changes require you to adapt to new or unknown situations, which in itself can be stressful.

Solution

Controlling lifestyle change isn't as difficult as it may sound. When one aspect of your life changes (positively or negatively), do what you can to limit other changes. If you've become a new parent or started a new career, for example, make an effort to continue doing the things that bring you pleasure—don't change your entire lifestyle just because one of the variables is different.

Problem

Stress overload can occur when you find yourself faced with situations beyond your control that have combined to an unmanageable level. At home or in the workplace, there may be times when you feel pulled in so many directions at once that you're not sure what to deal with first. Try to accept the fact that it's virtually impossible to control all of life's variables.

Solution

Take a break when your stressors combine to the "I can't cope" level. Sometimes you need a little distance from your problems to figure out how to deal with situations effectively. Take a few minutes by yourself to calm down. Sit down, relax, and then decide what needs to be done immediately, what can wait until later, and so on. Take it one step at a time!

Problem

Feeling helpless often results when the cause of your stress is not easily recognizable or manageable. If you (or someone you know) feel as if there's "no way out," or feel overwhelmed or depressed, seek out professional help. Your family physician, your employer, or local health agencies can refer you to a specialist who can help you to cope with these feelings.

Solution

Finding help is the best solution when you feel overwhelmed or unable to deal with stress on your own. First, you should see your doctor who can help to rule out any medical reasons for your problem. Then, if no physical problem exists, consider seeing a professional counselor who can help you understand your feelings. Even when you feel "helpless," remember: help is available.

Relaxation

Breathing

Once you've become aware of stress, it's time to relax! There are many techniques for relaxing (and no one method is better than another), but the most basic is deep breathing. One of the body's automatic reactions to stress is rapid, shallow breathing. Breathing slowly and deeply is one of the ways you can "turn off" your stress reaction and "turn on" your relaxation response.

Basic Technique

Deep breathing is a simple technique that is basic to most other relaxation skills. By inhaling deeply and allowing your lungs to breathe in as much oxygen as possible, you can begin to relieve the tension that can lead to negative stress. And, best of all, deep breathing can be done anywhere and at any time. Try to practice deep breathing for a few minutes three or four times a day, or whenever you begin to feel tense.

Clearing Your Mind

Another relaxation technique that can help reduce stress is "clearing your mind." Since your stress response is a physical and emotional interaction, giving yourself a mental "break" can help relax your body as well.

When you clear your mind, you try to concentrate on one pleasant thought, word, or image and let the rest of your worries slip away.

Basic Technique

Clearing your mind forms the basis for other relaxation techniques such as meditation. The principle of clearing your mind is really quite simple—by allowing yourself to mentally focus on a single, peaceful word, thought or image, you can create a feeling of deep relaxation. Clearing your mind helps you take a mental and physical retreat from the "outside world," and helps balance the stress of everyday life.

Progressive Muscular

The techniques described up until now are most helpful for people who know what relaxation feels like, but who may not know how to concentrate on relaxing. But what if you are so "geared-up" that you're not even sure how it feels to relax? Progressive muscular relaxation is a technique that can help you actually feel the difference between tension and relaxation.

Basic Technique

Progressive muscular relaxation is a three-step technique. First, you tense a muscle and notice how it feels, then, you release the tension and pay attention to that feeling, and finally, you concentrate on the difference between the two sensations. This exercise can be done while sitting or lying down and only takes about fifteen minutes. It helps if you can practice the technique in a quiet, relaxing atmosphere.

There are a number of other techniques that can help you balance stress with relaxation. No one technique is "better" than another—you should use whichever ones work best for you.

Developing a Positive Attitude

Stress awareness and relaxation techniques are key elements of stress management, but equally as important is a positive approach to life in general—both in your mental attitude and physical lifestyle. By learning how to "think positively," and recognizing when to seek support from others, you can approach life—and stress—as a challenge to be enjoyed. Positive thinking is giving yourself the go-ahead to succeed. The main idea is to develop an attitude of challenge, commitment and control toward the inevitable changes of life. This can take practice. Here are a few techniques to try.

Self-talk

This means telling yourself what you can or can't do. Positive self-talk is saying "I can," and setting your mind to meet the challenge at hand.

Rehearsal

This is a way to prepare for a potentially stressful situation before it occurs. Think over the situation, go over the details, plan to take action and visualize yourself proceeding successfully.

Action Plan

Develop an action plan to help you turn a stress disaster into a new opportunity. Always make an alternate plan just in case the one you rehearsed doesn't pan out.

Conclusion

As you begin to manage the stress and improve the quality of your life, attempt to enrich the lives of others around you. In doing so, you may achieve an even higher level of fulfillment. If you have questions or want more advice on stress control check with your physician. ☐

Oral Contraceptives as an Over-the-Counter Medication

Deputy Editor's note: Should oral contraceptives be converted from prescription to over-the-counter sales in the U.S.? Arguments in favor of this proposition include the following: the risk of unwanted pregnancy is greater than the risk of modern oral contraceptives; the requirement that women see a physician to obtain a prescription for oral contraceptives is an expensive and unnecessary burden; the fact that men may obtain condoms without a prescription, while women require a prescription for oral contraceptives is, in some manner, sexist; and the experience of other countries, such as India and South Africa, that provide oral contraceptives over the counter.

Arguments against changing our present policy include the potential risks of self medication, the possibility of inappropriate use by relatively uninformed patients, and the loss of opportunity for health evaluation and counseling that can accompany prescription writing. Here are the views of five North Carolina physicians.

Joanne T. Piscitelli, MD

Duke University Medical Center, Durham*

I am not in favor of making oral contraceptives an over-the-counter medication. Oral contraceptives are safe and effective, especially for young, healthy non-smokers. Nonetheless, they are potent medications with wide-ranging effects and potential for drug interactions.

Correct, safe use of oral contraceptives requires instruction, especially for first-time users. Women need to be educated about possible side effects, major and minor, and how to respond should they occur. Can we rely on a package insert to provide this education? There are absolute and relative contraindications to using oral contraceptives. Can we rely on a woman to recognize when she is not a good candidate for a particular method? A more pragmatic issue concerns drug formulations that would be made available. In the absence of individualized evaluation, the average woman would have difficulty choosing an oral contraceptive suited to her needs.

Counseling is another area that is critical to our efforts to optimize health in women of reproductive age. Regular interaction with the health care system provides the opportunity for health maintenance, blood pressure monitoring, breast examination, and Pap testing. In fact, sexually active young women, who are at highest risk for cervical cancer, may benefit most from such counseling. A patient visit initiated by a request for an oral contraceptive prescription is an excellent time to address high-risk behaviors such as exposure to multiple sexual partners, to stress the need to use condoms for protection against sexually transmitted diseases, and to encourage abstinence as a viable alternative, especially for our very young patients.

Vaginal sponges are safe, over-the-counter products analogous to condoms, available to all women. I feel that the contraceptive sponge is a better option than unsupervised use of oral contraceptives for women unable or unwilling to seek medical care. □

Oral contraceptives are among the most widely used medications in the U.S. (more than 80% of women take birth control pills at some time in their lives). No other medications have been so thoroughly evaluated for efficacy and safety as the contraceptive steroids. These drugs have well-established health benefits beyond that of contraception.^{1,2} I believe it is now time to make these medications available over the counter.

There are several substantive but not compelling objections to such a policy. One is that the health care of women will suffer because they will not be required to undergo an examination before obtaining a prescription for birth control pills. In an age that emphasizes patient autonomy, this argument seems overly paternalistic and lacking in respect for women's intelligence and their right to maintain control over conception.

There is concern that improper use of the medication will thereby reduce its net contraceptive effectiveness. Currently, 25%-30% of women who have been provided contraceptive steroids by health care professionals report that they miss scheduled pills. Compliance depends on motivation, which derives from the patient's needs, and on education, which justifiably should be the responsibility of those who manufacture and sell the medication.

Another objection to over-the-counter birth control pills is that family planning clinics, where many women (especially those of low income) receive health care, might lose the subsidy they now receive to distribute contraceptive medications. Health Department and Planned Parenthood clinics, as a consequence of bulk purchasing of medication, could still offer oral contraceptives at less than the prevailing retail rate, and specify an annual preventive examination as a prerequisite to receiving the drugs at lower cost.

A potential positive consequence of over-the-counter sale would be a decline in price of contraceptive steroids, which are now subject to egregious mark-ups. I predict that well-designed prospective trials will show that the net health benefits of selling oral contraceptive steroids over the counter will far outweigh their risks. We must let women decide when they will take these medications and where they will purchase them. □

Why should cigarettes, with their known health hazards, be sold over the counter while oral contraceptive tablets are not? After all, Kost³ has demonstrated that oral contraceptives prevent pregnancy and improve women's health. Oral contraceptives have withstood 30 years of epidemiologic evaluation which has shown their added benefit of protecting from ovarian and endometrial cancer.¹ U.S. Vital Statistics from 1988⁴ indicate no female deaths associated with use of natural or synthetic substitutes for ovarian hormones but, during the same time, there were four unintentional and 202 intentional deaths associated with over-the-counter analgesics. Should we regulate the use of aspirin rather than contraceptives? Grimes² eloquently states the point, "As is usual in the case of medicine, the intensity of feelings on this issue is inversely related to the amount of information available. Little is known about how dropping or relaxing the medical requirements for oral contraceptives might affect either contraception or preventative services for women."

Let's consider the ethical issues. A strong ethical position requires consistency. Is it consistent to require women to have medical evaluation before the use of contraception since men do not have this requirement for the use of condoms? Or should we compare the use of condoms to a woman's use of contraceptive foam? Moreover, linking clinical examination to the use of oral contraceptives implies the use of power by the physician. There are three ethical uses of power: own power, shared power, or aimed power. The weakest of these three, own power, characterizes the linkage of medical examination with use of oral contraceptives. Shared power or aimed power imply more active participation of the patient in making decisions. The consistent ethical trend of medicine during the past generation is toward empowerment of the patient in the ethical/clinical decision-making process. There could be no better example of empowerment than to allow women to regulate their own contraceptive uses.

Trussell⁵ makes a persuasive argument that women can do their own medical screening history and breast self-examination, but this would not provide proper cytological screening for cervical dysplasia in sexually active women. Again, this raises the issue of linking prescription to examination. A demonstration project in Pennsylvania⁶ allowed adolescent patients to postpone pelvic examination and testing for up to six months after receiving pills. The initial evaluation included blood pressure determination, urinalysis, and a urine pregnancy test. The director stated that this program "gave the adolescent a sense of importance that they could make the decision." Concerns that teenagers would not return for pelvic examination or for sexually transmitted disease screening were not verified. Additional confirmation of responsible behavior comes from experience with the use of over-the-counter antifungal medications, Norplant®, and copper-containing intrauterine devices.

What are the legal concerns? Should complications occur, who would be legally responsible—the pharmacist? The drug company? A physician who may not have seen the patient? Many of the decisions regarding use of oral contraceptive pills will be made by women under the age of 18. Will their parents be responsible under law? How would the cost of medical care be affected by this proposal? Are physicians' fees balanced by their ability to avoid potential complications and the expense of treatment? We have no information on these points.

My position for the past 30 years has been consistent with the general medical opinion: that obtaining oral contraceptives should be linked to health care evaluations for women. Now I need to validate my position. But before important public and medical policy changes are made, we need scientific information based on randomized clinical trials. It is time for us to study this issue in an objective manner by such trials. We need to make this important policy change with caution, based on scientific fact, not opinion. □

number one threat to the well-being of American teenage females.⁷ I believe that increasing the availability of oral contraceptive pills by allowing their purchase over the counter may decrease the rate of teenage pregnancy, but it will not solve the problem. Sex education programs and school-based clinics have made information about pregnancy prevention increasingly available, but the pregnancy rate for women aged 15-19 in the U.S. remains 96/1,000 as compared to 44/1,000 in the United Kingdom, 35/100 in Scandinavia, and 14/1,000 in the Netherlands.⁸ In the U.S., only 16% of adolescent pregnancies are intentional; three-quarters of adolescent unintended pregnancies occur because of failure to practice contraception.⁹⁻¹⁰

We do know a good deal about teenage contraceptive practices. Most teenage females do not initiate use of contraception until they have been sexually active for six months to one year.¹¹ But half of all teenage pregnancies begin in the first six months of sexual activity and 20% in the first month alone!¹¹ Use of contraception is age-dependent, with increasing use by older teens.¹² Sociologic factors are significantly associated with the use of contraception by teenage females: whites use contraceptives more often than blacks; teens whose mothers completed high school and those who live in an intact family use more contraception.¹³

The presence of school-based clinics, which offer on-site dispensing of contraceptives and sex education, decreases the birth rate among teenage females by 40%-50%.¹⁴⁻¹⁵ A 1987 study from a school-based clinic in Minnesota led to the following conclusions: 1) 77% of the sexually active teens used some method of contraception; 2) use of contraception increased in both younger and older sexually active teens as contraceptives became more readily available; 3) condom use was the most popular form of contraception (used by 41% of subjects) followed by oral contraceptives (30%).¹⁶⁻¹⁷

The reason most often cited for not making contraceptives more available to teenagers is the fear that this will make them more sexually promiscuous. This has been disproved by studies that indicate that the age of onset of intercourse is unchanged or actually delayed in teens who have had sex education classes or access to school-based clinics, as compared to teens without those services.¹⁶⁻¹⁷

There is a less known, but very real, benefit of increased access to oral contraceptive pills: their use as a postcoital ("morning after") contraceptive. Two to four oral contraceptive pills containing levo-norgestrel (Ovral, Lo/Ovral, or Levlen) taken within 72 hours of unprotected intercourse during mid-menstrual cycle, followed by another two to four pills taken 12 hours later can stop the release of an ovum, disrupt the fertilization process or prevent implantation of the fertilized egg into the lining of the uterine wall. Up to two million unplanned pregnancies could be prevented (and the rate of abortions drop) if oral contraceptive pills were used in this fashion.¹⁸ This method has minimal, temporary side effects: nausea and vomiting, which can be modified by use of an antiemetic; and transient breast tenderness, dizziness, and fluid retention. RU-

486 is an even better postcoital contraceptive¹⁹ but, given its unavailability in our current political milieu, oral contraceptive pills provide an inexpensive, viable alternative. This method is currently not officially sanctioned by the FDA, but physicians have the right to prescribe drugs for unlabeled but reasonable purposes.²⁰ Were oral contraceptive pills available over the counter, they could be used easily, at the right time (within 72 hours after unprotected intercourse during mid-menstrual cycle) and in the appropriate dose to decrease the troublesome rate of unplanned teenage pregnancy. □

There are several reasons to consider making oral contraceptives available over-the-counter. Requiring a physician's prescription obstructs access to oral contraceptives, which are as safe as many other over-the-counter medications and are associated with fewer health risks than those of unwanted pregnancy. Proponents of changing to over-the-counter status believe it will reduce costs, improve access, and result in fewer unwanted pregnancies.

On the other hand, eliminating physicians' charges for contraceptive visits may lead to increased charges by manufacturers and pharmacists who will have to assume increased liability exposure, educational requirements, and consumer marketing expenses. This is what happened with vaginal antifungal preparations—when they became available over the counter, the retail price went up!

A change to over-the-counter status may also result in improper use and higher rates of contraceptive failure. And unless regulations are changed, Medicaid recipients will have reduced access to oral contraceptives, since Medicaid does not cover the costs of nonprescription medications. These effects may result in more, rather than fewer, unwanted pregnancies.

Some feminists argue that requiring health screening for women who want to use oral contraceptives is analogous to requiring health screening for men who use condoms. Not so. Condoms have very few health risks, but oral contraceptives do, including increased rates of cervical infection with Chlamydia trachomatis, a possible increase in cervical neoplasia and, if taken inadvertently during early pregnancy, teratogenicity.

The primary benefit of requiring dispensing by prescription is that it provides an opportunity for preventive health care (counseling; general health evaluation; screening for sexually transmitted infections and cervical neoplasia) and thus the opportunity to prevent the disability and even greater costs of overt disease such as pelvic infections and cervical cancer. Despite the rosy predictions of health planners and policy makers, the actual impact of a transition to over-the-counter availability remains to be seen. It may be that the immediate cost savings derived from eliminating the need for preventive health visits may be offset by more expensive interventional care in the future.²¹ □

Catherine Johnson Jackson: A Dose of Editorial DNA

by Robert W. Prichard, MD, Editorial Board member

The lead article of the North Carolina Medical Journal's debut issue in January 1940 was the presidential address of Wilmington's Dr. J. Buren Sidbury titled "The Doctor and Socialized Medicine." Although Catherine Johnson's name did not appear on the Journal's masthead until June 1940, she was already the assistant editor. Her father was Journal founding editor, Dr. Wingate M. Johnson, a member of a literary and academic family. His first cousin, Gerald Johnson, was an editor at the Baltimore Sun and sufficiently good at it that even H. L. Mencken liked and respected him.

Catherine Johnson had a full dose of the Johnson editorial DNA. Her father said that one of his most startling dreams featured Catherine returning a manuscript to him without any editorial suggestions. He said he awoke, considered the dream carefully, and decided that it would never have a counterpart in real life, but it did fit Freudian notions of the dream as wish-fulfillment.

After working for the Journal for 10 years Catherine Johnson married Edward W. Jackson, an accountant for what is now Blue Cross and Blue Shield. He and Catherine moved to Durham, where they raised their daughter Anne and son Bruce. Editing and writing were not denied a place in Catherine's life, however. She continued to practice her art and craft, primarily in the field of Christian ethics and life, until shortly before her death on January 15 at age 74.

Her interest in the Journal never waned. During the years in which her cousin, Louise Fant MacMillan, was assistant editor, Catherine could be persuaded to comment on the Journal's quality. It occasionally pleased her. She did a lot of freelance medical editing for physicians who never before knew how badly they wrote. Always polite and kind, she could nonetheless reduce them to blithering as she pointed out the inconsistencies, unsupported statements, contradictions, grammatical blunders, and omissions in their offerings. One peacock among us whose book chapter she edited came out of his office crying "I didn't send this to her to be insulted!" After he calmed down, "friends" in his department pointed out to him that he had not been insulted, only revealed as inept—a painful realization for any of us.

The present-day Journal's high standards of editing continue a tradition now more than 54 years old. Catherine Jackson's passing represents the end of the group that brought our Journal into existence. She did well and hoped the rest of us would also do well by the Journal. □

Pen-Based Medical Network™ offers very significant benefits for doctors and staff. Review medications, lab results, progress notes and input orders, charges, diagnoses, examination results without a keyboard.

These FAST changing times force physicians to see more patients for less compensation while struggling to maintain high patient care standards. The ONLY answer is to practice with higher efficiency. However, statistics demonstrate that outdated office procedures are the norm resulting in the CERTAINTY of lost time, lower standards of patient care and reduced revenue. Just a few statistics in areas where the Pen-Based Network can help:

- 38% of a doctor's time is spent writing charts.
- 50% of a nurse's time is spent writing charts.
- In 30% of patient visits, the medical record is inaccessible.
- 11% of laboratory tests have to be reordered because the results are not in the chart.

What is the Pen-Based Medical Network?

It uses a hand-held, light-weight, mobile, electronic chart. Achieve cost control, improve communication, meet user and patient expectations. Charts are available to multiple users simultaneously. Give nurses more time for patient care. Enhance quality of care. Develop more effective care plans. Improve cash flow.

Medicine in Nazi Germany: 1933-1945

John E. Gardella, MD

The history of Nazi medicine is not widely known. As a practicing internist with an interest in medical history, I used to think that only Dr. Josef Mengele and a handful of other Nazi physicians perpetrated the atrocities of that regime. I was surprised to learn from Robert Lifton's The Nazi Doctors and Robert Proctor's Racial Hygiene that brutal medical experiments on concentration camp inmates represented only one aspect of Nazi medicine. Many physicians willingly implemented Nazi racial policies including involuntary sterilization, euthanasia, and the extermination of Europe's Jews and other ethnic minorities. On reviewing the literature on Nazi medicine I learned that German biomedical scientists, working before the rise of Hitler, laid the foundation for Nazi racial beliefs and policies. So complete was the incorporation of "scientific" racial theory into Nazi ideology that Hitler's deputies sometimes referred to National Socialism as nothing but applied biology. In this paper I summarize what I have learned about this interesting (and still relevant) subject: how the biomedical community invented key segments of Nazi ideology and how it willingly participated in the practical applications of this ideology—forced sterilization, medical killing in the guise of euthanasia, and finally, the Holocaust.

Eugenics: A Cornerstone of Nazi Ideology

The father of eugenics was Sir Francis Galton, who thought that humankind could shape the course of evolution by selective breeding.¹ In 1895 German physician Alfred Ploetz coined the term "Rassenhygiene" (racial hygiene) to describe his notion of eugenics. Ploetz proposed some specific ways to "promote" the health of the German people, including withholding medical care from the "weak" because they would be unable to survive or reproduce without medical intervention.^{2 p17}

In the early 20th century, many eugenicists and racial hygienists regarded complex behavioral traits such as intelligence, criminality, and even poverty as genetically determined and subject to eugenic control. By their logic, social problems were reduced to biological problems. The goals of the eugenicists and the racial hygienists were embraced across the political spectrum and across national borders. In the United States, compulsory vasectomy was introduced into the prison system in order to sterilize the criminally insane. Forced sterilization for eugenic purposes was endorsed by prominent politicians including Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson. In 1927 the U.S. Supreme Court, in an opinion written by Oliver Wendell Holmes,³ upheld the constitutionality of forced sterilization as a public health measure.

In Germany after World War I, racial hygienists feared that society was in grave danger of degradation. The "best" of the country's youth had been killed in the War leaving only the "inferior" to reproduce. Conservative nationalist thinkers dominated the racial hygiene movement—individuals who would later be incorporated into the leadership of the Nazi medical apparatus. The case of Julius Friedrich Lehmann illustrates this point. Lehmann's publishing house printed more works on racial hygiene than did all other publishers combined. After the Nazis came to power, he published the official commentaries on the 1933 Sterilization Law and the 1935 Nuremberg Laws. Lehmann was rewarded with the Nazi's Gold Medal of Honor and with honorary degrees from the universities of Tübingen and Munich.^{2 p25-74}

Hitler and the Doctors of Germany

On January 30, 1933, Adolf Hitler became Germany's chancellor and promptly appealed to the German medical profession to help apply the ideas of racial hygiene. In one of his earliest public speeches, Hitler told the National Socialist Physicians League that doctors would be indispensable in implementing the Nazi biomedical vision. Hitler asked German doctors to concern themselves not with the welfare of individual patients but with the welfare of the German people as a whole. The Nazis attacked traditional compassion for the weak and infirm, insisting instead that the state and the medical profession had a supreme duty to care for the "hereditarily sound" portion of the

³ The medical profession did not shrink from him. Up to 45% of all doctors ultimately joined the Nazi party; about 26% of all male physicians joined the Storm Troopers, and about 7% joined the SS. The number of physicians in the SS was 15 times greater than their representation in the general population.^{2 p65-8}

Why were doctors attracted to the Nazis in such numbers? The eugenic slant of the Nazi movement reflected prevailing beliefs in medicine and may have given the regime intellectual credibility. Under the Weimar constitution, sterilization had been forbidden, but it became the centerpiece of Nazi eugenic legislation. Under the Nazis, medical examination was required at specified times: at age six when entering school, at age 14 when entering the Hitler Youth, at age 18 when entering military service, and when applying for a marriage license. Doctors who believed in racial hygiene had a chance to put their beliefs into practice at these times.

Opportunism is another possible factor. Anti-Semitism within the medical profession attracted some doctors to the Nazis, in part because driving Jewish doctors from their jobs (as was finally done in 1938) would open opportunities for non-Jewish practitioners. Finally, many German doctors complained that their profession was becoming too specialized, too impersonal, too bureaucratic—problems often blamed on Jews and socialists. Whatever the reason for the attraction, the German medical profession prospered under the Nazi regime. By 1938, the average German practitioner earned 15,000 Reichmarks (RM) per year, compared to 9,600 RM in 1932.^{2 p65-70}

In 1933 the entire German medical profession was Nazified under the leadership of Dr. Gerhard Wagner, head of the National Socialist Physicians League. Medical journals began to publish more and more articles on racial themes, and purged themselves of "non-Aryan" influences. Medical schools began to offer more courses on racial hygiene. By the mid-1930s, all physicians were required to attend medical refresher courses that

"...if gold ruste, what shold iren do?"

—Chaucer, The Canterbury Tales

For some time now, the Editors of this Journal—certainly Eugene Stead and I—have said that we want articles pertinent to the practice of medicine in North Carolina; that we want papers by North Carolinians, for North Carolinians, about North Carolina medicine. That policy has served us well, so I was somewhat perplexed to receive from John Gardella an unsolicited manuscript reviewing Medicine in Nazi Germany. How (I thought) could this be appropriate for our medical journal? True, it was by a practicing North Carolina doctor—but what about for and what about about?

I ought not have forgotten the lesson of History. We study and learn about the Past so that it may illuminate the Present and augur the Future. Dr. Gardella's paper represents the best of that tradition, the product of curiosity piqued rather than required by some academic assignment. The picture he paints of Nazi Medicine may not be unique, but it is vivid. Until I read his paper, I (like Dr. Gardella) was unaware of the way that moral corruption pervaded the entire medical community under National Socialism (and before).

But Dr. Gardella does more than merely catalogue the deformity of medicine under the Nazis. In fact, he convincingly depicts, in merciful brevity, the greasing of the "slippery slope" down which slid all of German Medicine (that paragon upon which Osler based his idea of the "clinic"). The moral cesspool at the bottom of the slide was hollowed out and slowly filled with offal, years—even centuries—before.

Dr. Gardella is slow to preach. He draws the stark outline of the horror, gives a few details, lets the enormity of it inundate us (if we will). But I cannot resist. There is too much here for us to contemplate, to learn again or anew. Those "Nazi doctors" were not moral mutants, much as we might like to think they were. They, like we, went to school to study anatomy and pathology and physiology, therapeutics and medicine and surgery. They, like we, stood on their day of graduation and swore "by Apollo the physician, and Aesculapius and Hygeia and Panacea and all the Gods and Goddesses...[to] give no deadly medicine to anyone if asked, nor suggest any such counsel." They, like we, struggled with the temptation to do good by hastening an "end that is coming anyway."

How easy it is to view the cultural geometry of others from the oblique angle of miles or years. I do not know whether the paced words of Jack Keivorkian and Timothy Quill and the Hemlock Society (see Dr. Bruce Blackmon's letter on page 160) sound as soft to our ears as the words of Karl Binding and Alfred Hoche or the suasions of "Rassenhygiene" must have to the doctors of early 20th century Germany as they began their sojourn into the Chamber of Horrors. Nor do I know whether we can tightrope along our seemingly "reasonable" path without slipping, without sliding. But I am convinced that we are no more safe from the easy descent than our German colleagues were. Just as I am sure that the arc of morality is traversed in tiny segments, each of which seems a straight line.

And I am sure—as sure as I can be—that the Guardians of the Gates of Buchenwald went to work, every day, whistling while they went; smiled at a "hard job, done well;" slept sound and safe in their beds at night, dreaming the dreams of the justified. I do, too; don't you? □ emphasized racial topics and sterilization techniques.^{2 p79-94}

The first legislative expression of the Nazi biomedical vision was the Law for the Prevention of Genetically Diseased Offspring (the Sterilization Law), passed on July 14, 1933. This allowed involuntary sterilization of individuals suffering from "genetic" diseases such as "congenital feeble-mindedness," schizophrenia, epilepsy, or alcoholism. Doctors were required to report every case of genetic illness or face a fine of 150 RM. Genetic health courts, consisting of two doctors and one lawyer, decided the reproductive future of patients without ever examining the individuals in question. Some 350,000 to 400,000 people were involuntarily sterilized by vasectomy or tubal ligation.^{4 p22-9} German medical researchers investigated ways to more quickly and cheaply sterilize subjects such as by scarification of the Fallopian tubes or x-ray exposure.^{2 p108-10}

In addition to the eugenics of sterilization, the Nazis hoped to "improve" society by encouraging women to remain at home and raise large families. Special loans were granted to men whose wives agreed to leave the workplace for the home. Access to birth control was restricted and voluntary abortion was illegal. To promote the "ideal" four-child family, the Honor Cross of German Motherhood was given to mothers of large families. The Nuremberg Laws denied full citizenship to single women, regarding them only as residents within the German state. Of course, despite these efforts, the Nazi war effort eventually siphoned so many men from the work force that female participation necessarily increased.^{2 p118-30} to eliminate all the mentally ill. At the Nazi Party Congress in Nuremberg in 1935, Dr. Gerhard Wagner spoke at length about the high cost of caring for the "genetically ill." At that same congress Hitler and Wagner reportedly agreed that when the next war came, they would authorize a national program of euthanasia. They felt that they would save considerable money by killing the institutionalized, that hospital beds would be freed for wounded soldiers, and that any protests from the churches would be muted by the upheaval of war.^{2 p181-5}

"Genetic health courts, consisting of two doctors and one lawyer, decided the reproductive future of patients without ever examining the individuals in question."

In May 1939, an advisory committee drew up criteria for the surreptitious killing of deformed and retarded children. By August 1939, physicians and midwives were required to report all cases of mongolism and other forms of mental retardation, microencephaly, hydrocephaly, spina bifida, and other congenital malformations. Health care workers were paid for each registration form submitted to the public health authorities. Three professors reviewed the forms and made a decision about whether a child should live or die—without any direct examination of the child and without parental consultation.

Twenty-eight hospitals were designated as euthanasia centers. Children were moved to one of these centers, kept at the institution for a few weeks to convey the illusion of medical treatment, and then killed using large doses of sedatives so that the death could be disguised as pneumonia or as a complication of treatment. Some institutions simply froze children to death by turning off the heat (the doctors could then argue that "nature took its course"). Parents were informed by letter that their child had died of pneumonia and that the body had been cremated immediately owing to the danger of epidemic.^{4 p50-62}

The Escalation of Racial Purification

The attempt to weed out "inferior specimens" via sterilization was too slow to satisfy the Nazi racial vision. By 1939 the genetic health courts were running out of cases, and more drastic means of racial cleansing via euthanasia were implemented. The euthanasia program became a rehearsal for the Holocaust.

In Germany, the philosophical justification for euthanasia was published in 1920 by the jurist Karl Binding and the psychiatrist Dr. Alfred Hoche. They argued that the institutionalized mentally ill, the feeble-minded, children with severe congenital malformations, and others constituted "life unworthy of life." The authors argued that killing such individuals was justified as long as a judicial panel approved the killing, and that medical ethics would not be violated because such individuals were "already dead," they represented "human ballast," the "empty shells of human beings."^{74 p46-7}

After the Nazis assumed power, these ideas did not remain in the realm of theory. Dr. Karl Brandt, Hitler's confidant and personal physician, reported that as early as 1933 Hitler planned

Prelude to the Holocaust

The adult euthanasia program was carried out under the camouflage of an organization (the Reich Group of Sanitoriums and Nursing Homes) located at Tiergarten 4 in Berlin. The program, called Aktion T 4 after the street address, sent questionnaires to all psychiatric institutions and homes for the chronically ill asking, under the guise of a statistical survey, detailed information about patients' ability to work. Once returned to Berlin, the questionnaires were evaluated by three doctors who determined which patients were to die. Those selected for death were transported by the SS, disguised as medical attendants, to one of six killing centers in remote areas of Germany. By mid-1940, some of the oldest chronic care facilities in Germany had been outfitted with gas chambers.^{4 p62-72}

By August 1941, some 70,000 patients had been killed in this gassing operation. It could no longer be kept a secret. The identical form letters sent to victims' families, the empty nursing homes, the smoke pouring from crematoria (that sometimes rained locks of hair on nearby towns) led many to grasp the true nature of the operation. Protests from families and denunciations from the churches began. Some Protestant ministers, including Paul-Gerhard Braune and Fritz von Bodelschwing, maneuvered to keep mental patients out of the euthanasia system. The Catholic bishops of Germany issued a pastoral letter in July 1941, that reaffirmed Catholic opposition to euthanasia. In August 1941, Clemens Count von Galen, the Catholic bishop of Münster, delivered a sermon explicitly condemning the killing of mental patients. Rather than imprison such prominent and highly admired clergymen, Nazi leaders chose to withdraw their sanction of Aktion T 4.^{4 p89-95}

Despite the absence of official approval of Aktion T 4, medical killing continued on the initiative of individual doctors. In this phase of "wild euthanasia," as it was called in Nazi documents, drugs and starvation replaced gassing as the means of medicalized killing.^{4 p96-102}

In early 1941, the Ministry of Interior ordered that all Jews in German hospitals be killed whether or not they met the criteria for euthanasia. Shortly thereafter Heinrich Himmler launched Operation 14f13, which used Aktion T 4 personnel and gas chambers to rid concentration camps of the physically and mentally ill. Among the "diagnoses" that warranted euthanasia was being an "inflammatory Jew hostile to Germans." Operation 14f13 became the bridge to the Holocaust.^{4 p134-44}

In January 1942, the Nazi leadership decided that all European Jews should be transported to the conquered Eastern Territories. Those capable of labor would be worked to death; those unfit for labor would be executed. The paraphernalia of the adult euthanasia program were chosen as the means for disposing of 11 million European Jews. To carry out this policy of genocide, the gas chambers at the mental institutions were disassembled, transported to the East, and reconstructed at Belzek, Majdanek, Auschwitz, Treblinka, and Sobibor. The doctors and nurses from the euthanasia program followed the equipment to its new setting. Germany's psychiatric hospitals forged a link between the destruction of the mentally ill and the mass murder of Europe's Jews.^{4 p157-62}

The German medical profession collaborated with the Nazi regime in the destruction of Europe's Jews, but anti-Semitism existed long before National Socialism, and independently of the racial hygiene movement. Anti-Semitism can be traced to the origins of Christianity and was forcefully articulated in the writings of the early Church Fathers including St. Augustine. In 1543, Martin Luther expressed the prevailing belief that Jews were ritual murderers and usurers in his tract Concerning the Jews and Their Lies. It is clear that Hitler and the Nazi leadership voiced an age-old hatred when they recast anti-Semitism in secular, pseudo-scientific terms. Hitler even used medical imagery in describing the Jews as a form of "racial tuberculosis" and, in his earliest writings, advocated their total elimination from the German state.⁵

The Role of Doctors

Physicians served the Nazi regime in the extermination camps as willingly as they had served the earlier programs of racial purification. Dr. Irmfried Eberl, veteran of the euthanasia program, became the first commandant of Treblinka—the death camp that opened in July 1942.^{4 p123-4} At each of the extermination camps, physicians performed superficial examinations to decide who among the new arrivals was fit for labor and who should be gassed. To create an illusion of medical care, Red Cross trucks were conspicuously parked near the arrival ramp. The trucks contained the poison, prussic acid.^{4 p171-2}

Medical experimentation was another function of the camp doctors. They investigated the most rapid methods of sterilization, expecting that such methods would be used on the conquered peoples of Russia and Poland. They also studied hypothermia, antimicrobial drugs, limb transplantation, and high-altitude exposure. There is no record that any physician questioned the ethical or moral repugnance of these studies.⁶

Germany surrendered at Reims on May 7, 1945.

At the end of the war, the

"Hitler even used medical imagery in describing the Jews as a form of 'racial tuberculosis' and, in his earliest writings, advocated their total elimination from the German state."⁵

Society for Racial Hygiene ceased to meet, but the genetic health courts continued operating until the Allies suspended them on January 8, 1946. The euthanasia programs of the state hospitals continued up until the Allied occupation. At the war crimes trial in Nuremberg, 23 German doctors were tried for crimes against humanity. Defendants included leaders of the German medical community such as Professor Joachim Mrugowsky, editor of a book on medical ethics, who was sentenced to death for injecting concentration camp inmates with typhus.^{2 p298-9} Of the 23 defendants, seven were hanged, nine sentenced to lengthy prison sentences, and seven acquitted.⁷ At the time of the trials, the West German government asked Dr. Alexander Mitscherlich to prepare a summary of the evidence. His report was not welcomed by the German medical community, was never reviewed in any medical journal, nor was it ever discussed at any scholarly forum.^{2 p309-10}

Academics who collaborated with the Nazis fared better than their non-academic colleagues. Otmar Verschuer, a mentor of Dr. Josef Mengele and an architect of the Nazification of medicine, was appointed professor at the University of Münster after the war. In 1946, he was judged a Nazi collaborator and fined 600 marks. Werner Catel, a founder of the children's euthanasia program, became professor of pediatrics at the University of Kiel and authored a pediatric nursing textbook. Many racial hygienists fanned out throughout the German academic community as professors of human genetics.^{2 p306-8}

The Message of History

Is any of this relevant today? I think so. Doctors working for authoritarian regimes still participate in medical atrocities. In the former Soviet Union, the psychiatric profession was used to silence political dissenters by institutionalizing them.⁸

Today, we see advances in molecular genetics which may allow the complete mapping of the human genome. When this project is completed, Francis Galton's and Alfred Ploetz's dreams of shaping human evolution may be within reach. Society will need to decide whether the state should select "desirable" genotypes and eliminate others.

Nazi medicine represents the greatest known distortion of the image of physician as healer. That era warns us of medicine's potential dark side, of how when medicine is practiced in a utilitarian fashion that neglects its humanitarian foundation, death looms like a cost-effective solution for society's problems. □

YOCON[®] YOHIMBINE HCl

Description: Yohimbine is a 3a-15a-20B-17a-hydroxy Yohimbine-16a-carboxylic acid methyl ester. The alkaloid is found in Rubaceae and related trees. Also in Rauwolfia Serpentina (L) Benth. Yohimbine is an indolalkylamine alkaloid with chemical similarity to reserpine. It is a crystalline powder, odorless. Each compressed tablet contains (1/12 gr.) 5.4 mg of Yohimbine Hydrochloride.

Action: Yohimbine blocks presynaptic alpha-2 adrenergic receptors. Its action on peripheral blood vessels resembles that of reserpine, though it is weaker and of short duration. Yohimbine's peripheral autonomic nervous system effect is to increase parasympathetic (cholinergic) and decrease sympathetic (adrenergic) activity. It is to be noted that in male sexual performance, erection is linked to cholinergic activity and to alpha-2 adrenergic blockade which may theoretically result in increased penile inflow, decreased penile outflow or both.

Yohimbine exerts a stimulating action on the mood and may increase anxiety. Such actions have not been adequately studied or related to dosage although they appear to require high doses of the drug. Yohimbine has a mild anti-diuretic action, probably via stimulation of hypothalamic centers and release of posterior pituitary hormone.

Reportedly, Yohimbine exerts no significant influence on cardiac stimulation and other effects mediated by B-adrenergic receptors, its effect on blood pressure, if any, would be to lower it; however no adequate studies are at hand to quantitate this effect in terms of Yohimbine dosage.

Indications: Yocan[®] is indicated as a sympathicolytic and mydriatic. It may have activity as an aphrodisiac.

Contraindications: Renal diseases; and patient's sensitive to the drug. In view of the limited and inadequate information at hand, no precise tabulation can be offered of additional contraindications.

Warning: Generally, this drug is not proposed for use in females and certainly must not be used during pregnancy. Neither is this drug proposed for use in pediatric, geriatric or cardio-renal patients with gastric or duodenal ulcer history. Nor should it be used in conjunction with mood-modifying drugs such as antidepressants, or in psychiatric patients in general.

Adverse Reactions: Yohimbine readily penetrates the (CNS) and produces a complex pattern of responses in lower doses than required to produce peripheral a-adrenergic blockade. These include, anti-diuresis, a general picture of central excitation including elevation of blood pressure and heart rate, increased motor activity, irritability and tremor. Sweating, nausea and vomiting are common after parenteral administration of the drug.^{1,2} Also dizziness, headache, skin flushing reported when used orally.^{1,3}

Dosage and Administration: Experimental dosage reported in treatment of erectile impotence.^{1,3,4} 1 tablet (5.4 mg) 3 times a day, to adult males taken orally. Occasional side effects reported with this dosage are nausea, dizziness or nervousness. In the event of side effects dosage to be reduced to 1/2 tablet 3 times a day, followed by gradual increases to 1 tablet 3 times a day. Reported therapy not more than 10 weeks.³

How Supplied: Oral tablets of Yocan[®] 1/12 gr. 5.4 mg in bottles of 100's NDC 53159-001-01 and 1000's NDC 53159-001-10.

Lieutenant Governor Dennis Wicker

Edward C. Halperin, MD, Deputy Editor

Editor's note: The following is an edited transcript of Dr. Halperin's interview with Lt. Gov. Wicker on December 30, 1993.

Halperin: I'll begin with what certainly will be "the health care policy question of the year." The day after President Clinton delivered his major health care speech to a joint session of Congress, the New York Times pointed out that the Clinton proposal will give the individual states a considerable amount of discretion in implementing health care reform. The Times also pointed out, however, that some states are ready to deal with this issue and some are not. Some state governments are looking forward to meeting the challenge, and some wish it would go away. Is North Carolina ready?

Wicker: I believe that North Carolina is getting prepared. I say that because we have pushed a proposal which, although not comprehensive, does point us in the right direction. It is my small business health care alliances proposal. Small businesses are the greatest creators of new jobs in the local economy, employ the largest number of workers in our state, and have the largest concentration of the uninsured. We are going to create health care alliances that small businesses can join voluntarily to purchase insurance. Combining many small businesses into purchasing alliances will give them bargaining power in dealing with insurers, and allow them to provide reasonable and affordable insurance at stable prices. I think this will take us as far down the road as we can go while still avoiding mandates. This is a fundamental difference between what I'm proposing and the Clintons' plan. They are talking about mandates; I think a voluntary system is a better way.

The General Assembly enacted our proposal and we've begun to implement it. It involves no new taxes and does not create a new layer of bureaucracy. Basically we jump start the alliances with one-time seed money and then fade out of the picture and let the alliances run themselves.

The General Assembly deserves a lot of credit for enacting the small business health care alliances. It's the centerpiece of our efforts. We are in the embryonic stages of forming these alliances and getting small businesses to join them through sponsoring agencies such as Chambers of Commerce and trade associations. The General Assembly also set up a Health Care Planning Commission to look at health care reform nationally and in North Carolina. So I think we're in good shape to deal with coming changes in health care.

Halperin: But a voluntary health care alliance does nothing to deal with the uninsured. People who are unemployed or are part-time workers are unaffected by such a proposal. Perhaps more importantly, small business may decline to offer health insurance or to enter into alliances because it drives up their cost of doing business. They may say: "My competitors are not taking on the expense of health insurance for their employees, why should I volunteer to do so?"

Wicker: I disagree. My alliance approach will increase coverage of the uninsured and keep a number of small employers from dropping coverage. I think that small businesses are concerned about this issue. The small business person's number one concern is to obtain affordable health insurance, at a stable price, for his or her employees. A survey by the National Federation of Independent Business about the concerns of small business people found that the number one concern was affordable and stabilized health insurance coverage. The operator of a small business wants to provide for his or her employees—they're the people who help build the business! And the costs of employee turnover hit the small businesses particularly hard—they want to minimize turnover by providing good benefits. I think they will join the alliances.

Finally, there is something else here that is a strong motivation. When the possibility of federally mandated coverage looms in the background, people will be more interested in getting a voluntary system to work.

Halperin: We have four medical schools in this state. The creation of health care alliances intended to force prices down certainly places teaching hospitals at a disadvantage. It is more expensive to practice medicine when there are learners. Students, interns, and residents order more tests and often work more slowly. If teaching hospitals have to compete with non-teaching hospitals on the basis of price, they almost certainly will lose out. If teaching hospitals lose

by Edward C. Halperin, MD

The spirit of political inquiry moves me from time to time. I think the readers of the Journal ought to know what is afoot in Raleigh concerning public policy and medicine. In previous issues of the Journal, I have published interviews with State Senator Wanda Hunt, Lieutenant Governors Robert Jordan and James Gardner, and Governors James Martin and Jim Hunt. I noticed, during the past year, that our present Lieutenant Governor, Dennis A. Wicker, has played a leading role in the health care debate. I decided to interview him—and off to Raleigh I went.

The role of the Lieutenant Governor in North Carolina has been in flux in recent years. By virtue of the state constitution, the Lieutenant Governor is first in line to succeed to the governorship should that office become vacant. The Lieutenant Governor also presides over the State Senate. During the 1989-1993 term of Republican James Gardner as Lieutenant Governor, the State Legislature (controlled by the Democratic Party) stripped some power from the office. Even now, with a Democratic incumbent, the State Legislature has been reluctant to return power to the office.

I don't think anyone can interview a State official without feeling a little patriotic. This really is a remarkable country. Where else could a citizen dash off a letter of request to the state Lieutenant Governor's office and get an interview within a few weeks? The sheer informality of it all is impressive. I drove to Raleigh, tape recorder in hand, parked at a meter near the old State Capitol and marched in for my appointment. I was taken on time. The Lieutenant Governor's office, in the old State Capitol, is a stolid affair. My seventh-grade history teacher would have called it a "federal style" office.

I learned early in my interview with Lt. Gov. Wicker that he and I are both about the same age and that both of us majored in Economics in college. Mr. Wicker's father served in the State House of Representatives for 14 years. The Lieutenant Governor was born and raised in Sanford, and received his B.A. from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Phi Beta Kappa. After a year as legislative aide on the Washington staff of U.S. Senator Robert Morgan, he went to law school at Wake Forest University, graduating in 1978. He was elected to the N.C. State House at the age of 28 and, in 1989, became State House Majority Leader. Mr. Wicker was elected Lieutenant Governor in 1992.

Of my interviews with political figures, Mr. Wicker's was clearly the best. He was well informed on matters of health policy and he spoke frankly, with little obfuscation except, possibly, his answer on the cigarette tax. Cigarettes cause one in five deaths in this country: more than AIDS, guns, and motor vehicle accidents combined. It is incredible that our political representatives tolerate this scourge. Nonetheless, we had an interesting and profitable talk.

After the interview, I had a chat with the Lieutenant Governor's press secretary. He thought that my questions were unusually detailed. I didn't. But his comment brought out how difficult it is to closely follow health care issues by reading North Carolina's newspapers. Even those papers that employ a health care reporter do not cover, in sufficient detail, complexities of the health care reform debate and policy that occur in the State House. □ patients and patient revenue, we will hurt the pipeline for the physicians of the future.

Wicker: You know, that's a problem we're going to have to consider. There may have to be some sort of adjustment for teaching hospitals.

Halperin: Another aspect to the Clinton proposal, and one that is of particular interest to North Carolinians, is the suggestion that part of the health care reform package could be financed by a new tax of as much as one dollar on each pack of cigarettes. What is your view on this?

Wicker: I think that the proposal for a tax on cigarettes to finance health care reform is discriminatory. There is no reason to single out one sector of the economy to bear the burden of health care reform. Why should tobacco unfairly shoulder all the burden? It shouldn't.

Halperin: I don't think most physicians would buy that argument. We all pay for cigarettes—in the form of higher health care costs, of more lost time from work by smokers, of care for smoking-related diseases in Veteran's hospitals. There are more than 50,000 articles in the scientific literature on the hazards of smoking and every member of society pays for the habit. Shouldn't the price of cigarettes reflect the societal costs?

Wicker: I don't believe you can single out tobacco to bear all the costs. We don't do it with anything else. It discriminates against a single sector of the economy.

Halperin: You could argue that the current pricing system subsidizes smoking by not forcing the price of cigarettes to reflect their true costs. Maybe a tax on cigarettes would, in effect, begin to approach parity?

Wicker: I don't think so.

Halperin: A perennial topic of interest to physicians is tort reform. Will we see some new initiatives about malpractice reform in the next session of the legislature?

Wicker: I practiced law for many years before I became Lieutenant Governor, but I never handled malpractice cases. Frankly, I think we've gone as far as we should go with this issue. I don't expect any new legislation here because I don't see the need.

Halperin: Let's turn to another topic—and one that's equally controversial. Recently anti-abortion protesters have adopted techniques of blocking access to clinics offering abortion services. There have also been some acts of violence directed against physicians providing abortions including one murder in Florida and an attempted murder in the Midwest. How do you view this issue?

Wicker: I am very strongly pro-choice. I don't think that people have the right to block the entrances to abortion clinics. People who do so are going beyond the accepted rights of free expression and should be vigorously prosecuted.

Halperin: Another area where we have seen violent protests involves the so-called "animal rights movement." There have been protests at Carolina Biological Supply in Burlington and at UNC-Chapel Hill directed against biomedical research using animals. North Carolina has a law directed against willful disruption of animal research, theft of research animals, or theft of laboratory notebooks. Do you support this law?

Wicker: Yes. Biomedical research is very important and I think that laws of that sort should be fully enforced. □

Zobel HB, Rous SN. Doctors and the Law: Defendants and Expert Witnesses. New York: W.W. Norton & Company, 1993, $22.95, 208 pages, ISBN 0-393-03450-X

Reviewed by Michael M. Lakin, Attorney at Law, 300 Wachovia Bank Building, Durham

The co-authors of this fine litigation companion for doctors are a Massachusetts Superior Court judge and a professor of urologic surgery at Dartmouth Medical School. Judge Zobel and Dr. Rous aim to help doctors involved in litigation to communicate with their lawyers and to understand the process of litigation and settlement. They also advise doctors who serve as expert witnesses for the defense or the plaintiff. The collaboration of these medical and legal professionals contributes to the book's success. Dr. Rous's background gives the book empathy with the doctor's effort to make sense of an unfamiliar and sometimes hostile environment. Judge Zobel has the legal expertise to warn the doctor of the pitfalls of litigation.

The authors often analogize aspects of litigation to situations the doctor will have encountered in the practice of medicine. At deposition or trial, they say, the malpractice defendant should keep in mind the medical maxim primum non nocere (first do no harm). When discussing the frustration and anxiety that the doctor feels upon being sued for malpractice, they pose the rhetorical question: "How can you cope?" Teamwork between the doctor and the lawyer is a big part of the solution, they say, and compare this teamwork to that between patient and doctor. They write: "How many times have you emphasized to a patient that recovery is a team effort, that you will be providing the professional advice and service, but that the patient's own attitude and will to get well are even more important? Now, although someone else is the professional and you are taking the dependent's role, the principle is still valid."

The authors provide common sense advice. They stress that at trial doctors will usually need to use ordinary English instead of medical vocabulary and jargon. For example, the doctor should discuss the patient's kneecap rather than his or her patella. In the trial setting jury comprehension is the most important goal. The book tells the malpractice defendant to keep cool even when it requires superhuman effort. If the case goes to trial, the plaintiff's expert witness at some point will portray the defendant doctor to the jury as having erred and caused the patient real harm. "Sitting motionless [will require] an immense act of will," write Zobel and Rous. "Make the effort. Stay calm.... Better to convey the quiet certainty of someone who knows that his time will come."

The writers discuss questions a doctor will consider in deciding whether to serve as an expert witness. They advise the doctor on how to give his or her opinion at trial in a way that is most personally satisfying and most persuasive to the jury. Zobel and Rous compare the medical expert witness to a teacher, whose function is to explain to the jurors something that without the doctor's testimony they could not understand. They discuss the common perception of the expert witness as a hired gun and how to combat this perception when the opposing lawyer uses it against the testifying expert. A full chapter discusses how the expert medical witness can communicate to the jury that it is not the opinion itself, but the expert's willingness to give it that merits the fee.

The authors discuss litigation concepts concisely and thoughtfully. They explain depositions, discovery, and roles of judge and jury. They provide facts that may correct misapprehensions of the reader. For instance, 96% of all civil suits, including medical malpractice cases, are settled before trial; about 80% of medical malpractice cases tried to a jury verdict nationwide result in a verdict for the defendant physician.

While I was in the process of reviewing Doctors and the Law, I discovered that a doctor friend had been sued for malpractice. I lent this book to my friend and he found it helpful. It demystified the litigation process for him. Concepts from the book served as a starting point for discussions between my friend and his lawyer. Doctors and the Law will be useful to any physician who is sued for malpractice or is asked to serve as an expert witness. It is a good reference book that the doctor can keep handy as questions arise during litigation. The book also gives encouragement and comfort to any doctor unwillingly embroiled in a lawsuit. □

Capsicum Annum

Another Revenge From Montezuma

Ronald B. Mack, MD

No matter which country Christopher Columbus was searching for in the late 15th century, he and his crew experienced landfall in the islands of San Salvador, Cuba, and Haiti. In his first letter to his financial backers, King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella, he mentioned that the customs of his discovered countries included the eating of meat with very hot spices. Without proper refrigeration, meat "spoiled" easily in these tropical climes, and the spices probably enhanced an otherwise ugly taste.

On his second voyage Columbus was accompanied by a physician (one of the earliest graduates of the Bowman Gray School of Medicine), Diego Alvarez Chanca. Dr. Chanca gave the first detailed report concerning the hot spice known as agi, probably an Incan name for the Capsicum plant.¹ I imagine it was called agi because it was not uncommon for a first-time ingester of these spices to exclaim, rather loudly, "Ah Gee!" These plants derive their scientific names from the Latin word, capsa, meaning box, in reference to the partially hollow, box-like fruit.² This plant is a highly desired spice and has been grown in some form in almost every society. This species includes the chili pepper, hot pepper, Christmas pepper, paprika, cayenne, and the ever popular jalapeño. It has been estimated that the United States imports more than three million pounds of capsicum every year, half from India and the remainder from Japan and Africa.³ It is further estimated that in tropical countries adults consume an average of three grams of capsicum per day. This particular flora can be found in your home in several ways: in a flower pot on your window sill, on a dinner plate at your home, or in a take-out order from Taco Bell. Be aware, however, that it is the major ingredient in so-called "pepper gas" sprays, popularly used as personal protection weapons by many civilians and law enforcement personnel.

When a Pepper Is Not So Sweet

The latest statistics from the American Association of Poison Control Centers Toxic Exposure Surveillance System show that the pepper plant, Capsicum annum, was the plant most commonly involved in toxic encounters.⁴ For the first time in many years it beat out Philodendron and Dieffenbachia as the most frequently reported flowering toxin. This popular spice-producer is a bushy, compact plant with glossy green leaves that grows to a height of approximately three feet.⁵ The peppers range from three to 12 inches in length; the Longum group includes the "hot" chili and cayenne pepper as well as the red pepper, and the Grossum group includes milder bell and sweet peppers and pimento. Varieties with the smallest fruits (peppers) are the "hottest." The Cerasiforme is an ornamental group and includes the red pepper; the Conoides group is also ornamental and includes the cone peppers. The Fasiculatum group is primarily ornamental and includes the red chili pepper and the cluster pepper.

The toxic material in these products is capsicum which contains 0.02%-1% capsaicin, 1.5% volatile oil, carotenoids, and 0.2% vitamin C. Approximately 70% of the irritant effect of the fruit of these plants (that is, the peppers) is due to their capsaicin content.⁵ Capsaicin is an alkaloid compound that is insoluble in cold water and increases in concentration as the fruit matures.⁶ This chemical is a fat-soluble phenol, an oleoresin, which imparts a very pungent taste to water even when diluted to one part per 11 million parts of water.³ The chemical structure is similar to that of eugenol, the active principle of oil of cloves, which can induce local analgesia—ask your dentist.

Sadomasochistic Foods

Interfacing with capsicum plants containing capsaicin can provide misfortune for your entire gastrointestinal tract, respiratory tree, skin, and eyes.⁵ Hot peppers have been used by certain child abusers to discipline young children;³ the effect can induce prolonged, intense pain. Because no visible marks are produced, this form of cruelty can be difficult to diagnose. Involvement of the gastrointestinal tract is well known and produces a burning and stinging sensation of the lips, tongue, and oral mucosa. It does not usually produce vesicles or other stigmata. If you guess that vomiting and diarrhea can result from ingestion of capsaicin you are correct. Epithelial cell sloughing and mild mucosal bleeding can also occur.⁷ Anal burning is another well-known late result of ingesting capsaicin. In my extended family I have several Hispanic nieces and nephews. In a recent conversation I asked one of my nephews how he could tell when he was hungry—he replied: “My culo stops burning.”

Dr. Mack is with the Department of Pediatrics, Bowman Gray School of Medicine, Medical Center Blvd., Winston-Salem 27103.

Involvement of the eyes with this plant substance can be awesome. A hapless victim who accidentally rubs his or her eyes after handling capsaicin-containing material can have pain, tearing, erythema, and remarkable blepharospasm. Changes can be seen in the fine structures of the sensory neurons of the cornea after such an event. In fact, irritation of any mucous membrane by this chemical can produce severe pain, erythema, and swelling. The nasal mucosa reacts in a similar adverse fashion as well.³

Inhalation can cause coughing, direct chemical pulmonary irritation, bronchospasm, and even pulmonary edema.⁷ Perhaps this is the proper moment to introduce the subject of “pepper sprays.” These weapons are utilized against muggers and other perpetrators, including unfriendly animals. The oleoresin of capsicum is a major ingredient of the “pepper gas” used as a personal protection weapon by law enforcement personnel and many civilians. Some “pepper sprays” contain CS (tear gas) as well. “Pepper gas” is now a generic term—so read the label well to determine what exactly the spray contains. These agents are quite effective in temporarily immobilizing an assailant, especially when sprayed into the eyes. Remember, the miscreant who is on the receiving end of this stuff can experience pulmonary difficulties but serious pulmonary involvement apparently is rare.

Most of the ill-fated exposures to capsaicin—those severe enough to require medical advice—result from handling peppers and other members of this infamous family.⁷ You can divide the dermatologic manifestations into acute and chronic. In acute cases, there can be irritation, erythema, and burning pain but no vesiculation. In chronic exposures (found in pepper processors, in food preparation plants, etc.), a severe dermatitis with vesiculation can occur. Exposure of abraded skin to capsaicin can provide many hours of painful nerve stimulation without physical burns.⁵ One example, resulting from chronic exposure and referred to as “Hunan Hand,” is characterized by an intense burning sensation and pain radiating up the arm.⁸

The major offending compound, capsaicin, apparently has the ability to block the effector side of the axon reflex, possibly by depleting nerve terminals of substance P.³ Capsaicin appears to initially induce the release of substance P from neurons, then block the synthesis and transport of substance P to the effector side of the axon reflex. Substance P depolarizes neurons to produce dilation of blood vessels, stimulation of smooth muscle, and activation of sensory nerve endings. (Why are you telling me all of this? I was in the kitchen trying to prepare and consume chili relleno and my hands, mouth, tummy, and nether parts are burning and you are saying it is due to substance P? Does that P stand for pain? There is a love/hate relationship with these gustatory gifts!)

Apparently some folks develop a desire for and tolerance to repeated consumption of capsicum products. Nevertheless, repeated dosing produces very little in the way of desensitization (that is, the same amount of pepper produces the same degree of burning³). Tolerance is believed to be due to a change in attitude. Whereas the burning sensation is initially disturbing it ultimately becomes acceptable, even desirable, and for many, very pleasurable. We are entering the realm of sadomasochistic foods. (Don't talk that way, my mother reads this section).

Treatment Tips

It is with regret that I inform the reader that there is no antidote for adverse involvement with this potentially frightful floral specimen. Do not induce emesis, the patient will probably perform this act spontaneously. Likewise, do not administer a cathartic as the intestine may very well reject the swallowed products without any artificial help. The administration of activated charcoal can be helpful to some patients. Some authorities recommend giving cold milk to assuage the oral burning.⁹ Eye exposure, which can be quite incapacitating, requires immediate irrigation with water, at room temperature, for a minimum of 15 minutes. Do not hesitate to refer the victim to an ophthalmologist if there is persistent pain, swelling, lacrimation, or photophobia. Pulmonary involvement may require giving 100% humidified supplemental oxygen and assisted ventilation. Immediate washing of affected skin areas with warm water and soap, should be followed by immersion of the part in vegetable oil for at least 75 minutes. Lidocaine gel can relieve pain.⁷ EMLA, an emulsion of lidocaine and prilocaine,¹⁰ may be used on skin severely irritated by capsaicin. Some of the weirdest skin manifestations have occurred in those unfortunate few who handle products containing capsaicin and then touch their private parts or someone else's. The victim ultimately suffers burning, dermatitis, and embarrassment. Remember what mother always said: “Wash your hands, etc, etc.”

Capsaicin, our friendly alkaloid, is now available, without a prescription, as Zostrix-HP (Gen Derm). It is suggested for the topical relief of pain due to diabetic neuropathy, herpes zoster, or arthritis. Can you believe it? This new formulation, containing 0.075% capsaicin, probably acts on nociceptive type C sensory neurons. (Nociceptive means capable of appreciation or transmission of pain. Say it fast 10 times after you say “Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers.”) Some of the aforementioned neurons produce the peptide neurotransmitter substance P, which may be involved in the transmission of painful impulses.

Yes, this medication is applied topically and no, rubbing a taco on an arthritic knee probably would not help much. The literature reporting on its use in certain conditions records favorable results, especially in patients with post-herpetic neuralgia, osteoarthritis, rheumatoid arthritis, and diabetic neuropathy. However, the high rate with which placebo relieved pain in these studies should make readers skeptical. To my knowledge double-blind studies have not been done.

Montezuma's Revenge Revisited

Montezuma was an Aztec emperor, born about a decade before Columbus' landfall in the New World. He was a stern dictator and was harsh in his relationships with the people he conquered. When Hernán Cortéz arrived in 1519 the oppressed subjects appealed to the Spanish conquistadors for help. Cortéz and his entourage made their way to the capital, seized this bad dude and attempted to use him as a "puppet" leader. The Aztecs, fed up with both Cortéz and Montezuma, revolted against the Spanish. It has been alleged that the Aztecs killed the Emperor with a large rock that struck his cabeza. The spirit of Montezuma still seeks revenge on us gringos in multiple ways, especially gastrointestinal. □

Aphorisms of the Month

"Random Thoughts on Medicine and The Future"

Editor's note: The first four aphorisms were provided by Journal Editor Francis A. Neelon, MD, who is the reason this column exists. The remaining three were contributed by Kenneth Devine, MD, a retired Mayo Clinic otolaryngologist who resides in Florida.

What sort of future is coming up from behind I don't really know. But the past, spread out ahead, dominates everything in sight.

—Robert M. Persig,

"Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance"

The greater physicians of the past, reasoning from what seems to us very faulty premises, somehow got their patients well, otherwise they would have had no clientele or following. The thing is to ascertain, if possible, just how they did it.

—Fielding H. Garrison,

"An Introduction to the History of Medicine," 4th ed.

The real work of a doctor... is not an affair of health centers, or public clinics, or operating theatres, or laboratories, or hospital beds. These techniques have their place in medicine, but they are not medicine. The essential unit of medical practice is the occasion when, in the intimacy of the consulting room or sick room, a person who is ill, or believes himself to be ill, seeks the advice of a doctor whom he trusts. This is a consultation and all else in the practice of medicine derives from it.

—Sir James Spence,

"The Purpose and Practice of Medicine"

Traditionally, Medicine is a philosophical discipline that can be studied in any number of ways, going to medical school among them.

—Guido Ceronetti,

"The Silence of the Body"

Long ago I learned from my father to put old people to bed only for as short a time as was absolutely necessary, for they were like a foundered horse, if they got down it was difficult for them to get up, and their strength ebbed away very rapidly while in bed.

—Charles H. Mayo

Those of us who have passed our three score years are actually farther removed in light years of knowledge from our fathers than our fathers were removed from King Tut.

—Charles H. Mayo

Oceanfront Living Like Nowhere Else in the World.

*I*n a lush and beautiful area just south of Charleston lies a private island called Jeremy Cay...it is a place of history and Southern folklore, where dirt roads wind lazily among live oaks, palmettos, and tidal lagoons, past some of the most majestic scenery in the Southeast.

To say that Jeremy Cay offers "oceanfront living like nowhere else" is certainly no overstatement; it is naturally secluded from the rest of the world, yet only minutes from restaurants, tennis, and golf. It is a place for families to

Randy Long, M.D., Lexington, N.C.

Earning its way from the first day

"CompuSystems' Medical Practice Management System has been an integral part of my practice since I opened five years ago. Actually, we had the equipment in place and had been through training two weeks before opening. That investment paid off right away: In our first day, we used the Appointment Scheduler module to make 76 appointments."

Flexible software to suit your needs

"One of the Medical System features we've found most beneficial is its flexibility. There's almost always more than one way to complete a given task. We can select the options that suit our preferences and operational needs. And CompuSystems' staff is always available

Outstanding service to stay productive

"The service and maintenance we get from CompuSystems couldn't be better. They stay on top of the myriad changes implemented by Medicare and other third-party carriers, so our software is always up to date. If we have a question or problem, we can get the help we need. Finally, consistency is provided at all levels: The telephone support staff keeps excellent records, so we don't start over each time we call, and the on-site hardware service is expert."

"After five years, I have only praise for CompuSystems, and I can't imagine running my practice without their help."
